PREFACE.

THE present Edition is submitted to the Student, with the hope that it may be found in some degree available towards the attainment of correct and competent information, upon the various topics which are comprised in the FASTI of Ovid.

There are, indeed, but few peculiarities connected with the habits and manners, or the civil and religious institutions of his country which the poet has not directly or by inference contrived to introduce into the following work ;—one which has been generally and justly considered by the best critics, and amongst the rest by Rapin, to be as effective in execution as it is valuable and important in design.

The very nature of the subject afforded ample scope for the display of that high order of poetical ability with which the name of Ovid must be ever associated. The religion of heathen Rome, it has been justly observed, was interwoven with every circumstance of business or pleasure, of public or private life ; with all the offices and amusements of society :—hence it may be readily concluded that a minute account, such as the FASTI presents of the origin and details of the Roman rites and ceremonies, founded as the whole system was upon fable, could not fail to be enriched by such attractions as Mythology could possess for an ardent fancy and cultivated taste.

This poem, which was originally intended to have been dedicated to Augustus but was afterwards published under the auspices of Germanicus, was commenced previous to the mysterious occurrence which led to the author's exile to Tomi, where it was finished.

There are no good grounds for supposing, in contradiction apparently to what Ovid has stated himself, that six books only of the FASTI, were ever written: the silence of Lactantius upon the six latter books, while he speaks fully of those now extant, being accounted for by Heinsius, from the strong probability of their having been lost previous to the fourth century, the age of the 'Christian Cicero.'

Claudius Quadrigarius, Afranius, Ennius, Lucius Calpurnius Piso, Fannius, Laberius, and others, now only known by name, were the authorities whence Ovid derived the material of his FASTI; it need scarcely be added that they could have supplied him with but little more; its vivid colouring and brilliant ornaments are peculiarly the poet's own.

It will appear in several instances throughout the work that the poet has not confined himself to the more generally received mythologies and histories; wherever this has occurred the Editor has either stated the distinction, or, when possible, has attempted to reconcile the conflicting testimonies so as to afford the least complex illustration of the text; the subjects, however, which appeared not to admit of a fuller discussion in the immediate notes, will be treated of more at large, along with other matters, in the Addenda.

Such variations from the adopted text as were deemed worthy of notice have been mentioned, with the name of the copy from whence they were derived.

In compiling his illustrations, the Editor has consulted the most authentic sources, and in most instances has quoted, with scarcely any variation, the precise terms in which the requisite information was conveyed; preferring what was really useful to an affectation of originality, he has hazarded but very few conjectures of his own, and those only after considerable study and research.

Before concluding, the Editor would briefly advert to a point of some importance, connected with the introduction of the FASTI into the Academic course. It has been stated that the general character of the poem is such as scarcely to warrant its admission into colleges and schools;—this objection, founded upon utter ignorance even of what its name would imply, requires no refutation here; the FASTI, upon such grounds, being as little deserving of exclusion as any of the Latin works which have for ages formed a part of school and college discipline.

It must be admitted, however, that the poem is not free from a share of those blemishes into which the classic writers were betrayed from the peculiar taste and feeling of their times; and consequently, in compliance with suggestions which he felt himself bound to respect, no less than in accordance with his own views, the Editor has omitted all such passages as he conceived could be in any degree liable to objection. Such omissions, however, have been few and unimportant, so that where the poet has suffered no positive injustice, the student may, it is hoped, have been wisely spared from even probable injury.

It has been suggested that the present Edition of the FASTI having been already preceded by two others, would appear to have been put forward with a claim upon public support, which they were not supposed equally well entitled to deserve ; to this the Editor can only reply, that there appeared a wide field open for competition, nor has he the presumption to imagine that even yet the lists are closed.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

IN submitting a Second Edition of the Fasti to the Public, the Editor hopes he may be permitted, without charge of presumption, to express his unfeigned sense of the kind and encouraging reception of which, on its first appearance, the work was thought worthy. That the success of his exertions, in the sanction they have obtained in England and Scotland, as well as at home, has been a source of sincere gratification to him, would be an idle affectation to deny; at the same time he is fully aware that he required all the generous indulgence which has been so liberally and considerably bestowed.

The most careful attention, compatible with the discharge of momentous professional duties, has been exercised in revising and enlarging the present edition of the Fasti. In particular, the number of parallel passages from the English Poets has been increased, the Editor conceiving that among the many fascinations accompanying classical pursuits, not the least attractive consists in tracing the analogies of feeling and expression between ancient and modern intellect and taste.

Upon the importance of the Fasti of Ovid as a classic whose effective study must necessarily be followed by a valuable and extensive acquaintance with history and mythology, it is needless now to dilate: it has been already felt and acknowledged to an extent which precludes dispute.

P. OVIDIUS NASO, a. d. XII. Kal. April. Sulmone in Pelignis natus est: quo anno bello Mutinensi P. Hirtius et C. Pansa Coss. diem obiere. Honoribus Romæ functus: fuit enim arbiter et triumvir, et iudicium inter centum viros dixit. Sub Plotio Grippo literis eruditus: deinde apud Marcellum Fuscum Rhetorem, cujus auditor fuit, optime declamavit. Admirator plurimum Porcii Latronis fuit, quem adeo studiose audit, ut multas ejus sententias in versus suos transtulerit. Bonus declamator et ingeniosus habitus est, et carmine prosa licenter scripsit, ingenii sui adeo amator, ut ex iis quæ dixit, etiam precantibus amicis, nihil mutaverit. In carminibus vitia sua non ignoravit, sed amavit. Militavit sub M. Varrone. Julio Græcino Grammatico familiaris. Tandem cum venisset in suspicionem Augusti, creditus sub nomine Corinnæ amasse Juliam, in exilium missus est; exulavit Tomis, ibique decessit annum agens LX. novissimum.

JUDICIUM DE P. OVIDIO NASONE.

Ex Danielis Heinsii Libro de constitutione Tragediæ secundum Aristotelem.

Omnes Ovidius transcendit. Sive falsa probabiliter, sive obscura perspicue, sive utraque ornate, sive omnia simpliciter sint exponenda. Falsa, ut in Metamorphosi. Obscura, ut mathematica, et antiquitatis arcana in Fastis. Quæ ad mores pertinent, ubique. Etiam cum ludit aut lascivit. Idque verbis et oratione vulgari. Ut et dicat quæ velit, et doceat quæ quisque intelligat: tam admirabili felicitate, ut cum quivis idem posse videatur, nemo possit: nemo, nisi magni animi et excitati, tentare idem ausit: sapientes etiam desperent. Ubique sententiæ, ubique loci communes: de ignavia, de disciplinis, brevitate formæ, opum contemptu. Neque semper falsa narrat. Ut in opere jam dicto: in quo plurimas historias exponit. Ut Lucretiæ.

(Fast. ii. 721, et seq.) Nam quid cum simplicitate illa comparandum ? quam indocti et rustici fastidiunt : urbani et ingenui sine ulla imitationis spe adorant. Ecce celeritatem :

Nox superest : tollamur equis, urbemque petamus.

Dicta placent : frænis impediuntur equi.

Pertulerant dominos : regalia protinus ipsi

Tecta petunt : custos in fore nullus erat.

- Nullus equus, ac vix cogitato humana, hanc celeritatem assequatur. Tale est illud :

Sic sedit : sic culta fuit : sic stamina nevit :

Injectæ collo sic jacuere comæ.

Hos habuit vultus : hæc illi verba fuerunt,

Hic color, hæc facies, hic nitor oris erat.

Numerorum autem tanta in hoc scripto, cujus partem alteram habemus, paritas, simplicitas, ac invidenda suavitas, ut, quid magni viri velint, cum mutari quosdam posse existiment, neque ipsi, nisi fallor, neque nos intelligamus. Nondum enim cuiquam id probarunt, cum in simili scribendi genere versati sunt. Libri Tristium, et qui De Ponto inscribuntur, quo ab omni affectatione (quanquam iis cum plerisque illius scriptis hoc commune est) magis alieni sunt, eo magis commendari juventuti debent. Et ubique Latinitas, vel inter prima. Ut non temere Muretus, quo, post literas renatas, nemo sine affectatione elegantius scripsit, quendam, qui auctori tanto hanc detraheret, prodigii instar, ovis et sulphure lustrandum existimet. Ut et Josephus Scaliger. Julius autem, in Rhetoricis (qui illius libri cum aliis non paucis perierunt) tanquam absolutum et perfectum omni ex parte exemplum, scripta ejus proponebat. Neque temere alia auctoritate quæ docebat, quod non semel ex divino ejus viri filio audire memini, ubique confirmabat. Sed natura ejus viri, candor, ingenuitas, velocitas, quæ in narrationibus potissimum elucet, supra votum est. Proximum est ergo, recte de iis judicare.

P. OVIDII NASONIS FASTORUM* LIBER I.

TEMPORA cum causis Latium digesta per annum,
Lapsaque sub terras, ortaque signa, canam.

* Fastorum. Fasti-orum. m. Generally, 'chronicles,' 'annals,' 'public registers,' Here 'a calendar,' ἡμερολόγιον. Th. Fas. In its primary acceptation it is equivalent to annales, both terms being applied indiscriminately to the records kept by the Pontifex Maximus at Rome, (Cic. de Orat. l. 2, c. 12) of all the remarkable occurrences there and elsewhere. But in the text it is to be understood in a more limited sense, as applicable solely to the business of the Roman calendar. There were originally twelve books of the Fasti, 'Sex ego Fastorum scripsi totidemque libellos.' Ovid Trist. iii. 594. of which six only are now extant.

I. Tempora, &c. Days. (ἡμέραι). Causis, (αἰτίαι) Origin of, or design in the celebration of each particular day. The etymologies of this word are various—cavillor, casus, quæ-o, αἶσα, caveo.

1. Latium, &c. Arranged throughout the Italian year, i. e. the solar or Julian, which contained 365 days and one fourth, six hours; and which was adopted by Julius Cæsar when he became master of the state, in order to remedy many previous abuses. See infr. note 43. He did away with intercalations, and A. U. 707, adjusted the year according to the course of the sun, assigning to each year the number of days which they still contain. To ensure regularity, from the first of the ensuing January, he inserted in the current year, in addition to the intercalary month of 23 days, which formed of course a part of it already, two extraordinary months between November and December, the one of 33, and the other of 34 days, so that this year, which was called the last year of confusion, consisted of sixteen months, or 445 days. The year then fell into the order in which it has continued, with but one variation, that of the Old and New Style, occasioned by a regulation of Pope Gregory, A. D. 1582, to the present time. Cæsar was assisted in his plan by the talent and abilities of Sosigenes, a celebrated astronomer of Alexandria, whom he brought to Rome for the purpose; and a new calendar was formed from his arrangement by Flavius, a scribe, digested according to the order of the Roman festivals, and the old manner of computing the days by kalends, nones, and ides, which was published and authorised by the dictator's edict.

The poet commences with the month of January, which has retained its name since the time of Numa Pompilius to the present, with but one interval, during the reign of the emperor Commodus, in honor of whom, or of whose mistress rather, it was called 'Amazonius;' the original appellation was restored upon his decease by a decree of the senate. Ælius Lamprid. cap. xi.

2. Canam, in some copies Cano. See Virg. Æneid, i. 1. 1, and Fast. ii. 7, and iv. 12.

Excipe pacato, Cæsar Germanice, vultu
 Hoc opus ; et timidæ dirige navis iter :
 Officiique levem non aversatus honorem,
 In tibi devoto munere dexter ades.
 Sacra recognosces Annalibus eruta priscis ;
 Et quo sit merito quæque notata dies.
 Invenies illic et festa domestica vobis :
 Sæpe tibi Pater est, sæpe legendus Avus.
 Quæque ferunt illi pictos signantia Fastos,
 Tu quoque cum Druso præmia fratre feres.
 Cæsar's arma canant alii ; nos Cæsar's aras,
 Et quoscunque sacris addidit ille dies.
 Annue conanti per laudes ire tuorum ;
 Deque meo pavidos excute corde metus.
 Da mihi te placidum ; dederis in carmina vires ;
 Ingenium vultu statque caditque tuo.

3. Pacato. Favorable, benign.
 — Germanice. Son of Drusus Claudius Nero, and nephew of Tiberius, who, by the direction of Augustus, became his father by adoption. He received the surname, Germanicus, from his father Drusus, on whom and on whose posterity the senate bestowed it in commemoration of his illustrious conquests in Germany.

6. Dexter. Propitious.

7. Annalibus, &c. The annals, before Ovid's time, were compiled by Hemina, Claudius, Afranius, Eünius, Attius, Quadrigarius, Piso, Fannius, Fenestella, Laberius and Licinius.

— Eruta priscis. In Excerpt. Voss. Edita, a word in frequent use, in sacred matters, with Livy, Gron. ad Liv. xxv. 12, and xliii. 14 ; but eruta is approved. See Fast. iv. 11 ; for priscis some copies read primis. Propert. l. vii. 3 ; Lucan. x. 51.

8. Merito. Worth, value, or excellency.

— Notata. Notanda, Gotthorp. Medic. and Vatic. Sacrata Thuan. and another. Vocata Farestan.

9. Et festa d. Et signa d. some copies. Ut festa Junian.

— Domestica. So called because ordained in honour of the house of Cæsar.

10. Pater legendus, &c. i. e. In the course of your study you will frequently find your father and grandfather (Tiberius and Augustus, by adoption) the objects of your attention.

11. Pictos. Drawn, painted, sc. minio, with red lead.

12. Tu quoque, i. e. You too shall partake of the glory of your race. Druso, son of Tiberius, and by adoption, brother of Germanicus.

13. Canant. Canent Thuan. and Moret.

— Aras. Built and consecrated by Augustus. Scaliger suggested Aram, as allusion is most likely made to the altar consecrated by Augustus to Peace. However, aras is used for aram, Fast. vi. 357, where the altar of Saturn is evidently meant.

14. Dies. Deos Sarrav. and 15 ire tuorum, ire deorum Thuan. and Moret.

18. Vultu. Nutu Heins. as inf. 70 and elsewhere.

19. Movetur. Trembles, is troubled or agitated. A compliment to the critical taste of Germanicus.

20. Clario Deo. As if sent to be perused by the Clarian God; Apollo, so called from Claros in Asia Minor, where he had a temple and an oracle. Tacit. lib. ii. Annal. cap. 54.

— Missa. Musa Francof.

22. Cum tulit arma reis. Ora- vit, says Suetonius of Germanicus, causas triumphaleis. And Dio Cassius, lib. LVI. Καὶ αὐτὸς μὲν οὐδὲν ἄξιον μνήμης ἔπραξε, πλὴν ὅτι καὶ τότε ὑπεριδίκησέν.

23. Ad nostras, &c. Germanicus evinced a strong natural desire (impetus) for literary and especially poetical (nostras artes) distinction; he wrote several Greek comedies.

27. Conditor. Rome was founded by Romulus, B. C. 730.

28. Constituit menses, &c. It is generally supposed that Romulus did not ordain a new year, but that he merely made some alteration in the course of the months in that which previously existed. It appears that before the founding of the city, ten months was the year's duration in Latium as in many other nations; at Athens, for instance, where Clisthenes after the expulsion of the tyrants, divided the people into ten tribes:—Πρυτανεία θηλυκῶς ὁ χρόνος. Διήρητο γὰρ παρὰ Ἀθηναίους ὁ ἑνιαυτὸς εἰς δέκα πρυτανείας, ὅσαι καὶ φυλαὶ ἦσαν, καὶ ἐπρυτανευσαν ἐκαστῇ φυλῇ κατ' ἑνιαυτὸν ἅπαζ, ὅθεν καὶ τοὺς μισθοὺς καὶ τὰ ἐνόικια, καὶ τὰς πρυτανείας κατα μῆνα ἐτέλουν. Ammonius Herm.

32. Tueatur. Defend, excuse.

36. Sustinet. Preserves, keeps up, continues. Signa. The mourning garments; cypress boughs, which were hung up in the habitations of the deceased, &c.

Hoc igitur vidit trabeati cura Quirini,

Tertius à Senibus, Juvenum de nomine quartus :

Quæ sequitur, numero turba notata fuit.

At Numa nec Janum, nec avitas præterit umbras ;

Mensibus antiquis apposuitque duos.

37. Trabeati. The trabea was a robe worn by kings, consuls and augurs. It was white, adorned with stripes of purple (virgata vel palmata a trabibus dicta). According to Servius, made of purple and scarlet (ex purpurâ et cocco mistum), in Virg. Æneid. vii. 612. According to Pliny, Romulus used only the trabea. The toga prætexta (a white robe fringed with purple) was introduced by Tullus Hostilius, and also the latus clavus (a tunic or waistcoat with an oblong, broad stripe of purple, like a ribbon sewed to it on the fore part,) after he had conquered the Tuscans. Plin. ix. 39, s. 63. viii. 48 s. 74.

— Quirini. Romulus was called Quirinus, as Æneas Jupiter Indiges, after he had been ranked among the gods, either from quiris a spear, or Cures, a city of the Sabines. See Fasti, ii. 361-4.

38. Annua. Pertaining to the year.

39. Martis erat, &c. Romulus is said to have divided the year into ten months; the first of which was called Martius, March, from Mars, his supposed father, Fasti, iii. 74, 95; the second, Aprilis, either from the Greek name of Venus, (Ἀφροδίτη.) as above, l. 39. Horat. Od. iv. 11; or because then trees and flowers open (se aperiant) their buds. Plutarch. in Numa. Fast. iv. 87; the third, Maius, May, from Maia the mother of Mercury; and the fourth, Junius, June, from the goddess

Juno, or in honour of the young, (juniorum) as May probably of old, (majorum) as in the text, & Fast. v. 423. The rest were named from their number, Quintilis. Sextilis, September, October, November, December. Ibid. i. 41. Quintilis was afterwards called Julius, from Julius Cæsar; because in it he had been first made consul, and had obtained some remarkable victories Suet. 31, Dio. lv. 6, in particular he had become a master of Alexandria in Egypt, A. U. 724, and fifteen years after (lustris tertio), on the same day, probably the 29th of August, had vanquished the Rhæti by means of Tiberius. Horat. Od. iv. 14. 34. Other emperors gave their names to particular months, as l. 3, note 1, but these were forgotten after their death. Suet. Domit. 13. Plin. Pan. 54.

40. Princeps. Because Venus was the mother of Æneas, the head of the Roman descent. Pater. Mars was the reputed father of Romulus.

43. Numa. The second king of Rome. He added two months to the year of Romulus, called Januarius, from Janus, and Februarius, either because the people were then purified, (februabantur, i. e. purgabantur vel lustrabantur) by an expiatory sacrifice (Februalia) from the sins of the whole year, for this formerly was the last month in the year, Cic. de Legg. ii. 49. Tibull. iii. 1, 2, or from the sacrifices (febris) which were offered in this month to the shades of their forefathers, which explains nec avitas, &c. Numa, following the Greeks, divided the year into twelve months, according to the course of the moon, consisting of 354 days ; he added one day more Plin. xxxiv. 7, to make the number odd, which was considered more fortunate. But as 10 days, 5 hours, 49 minutes (or rather 48 minutes 57 seconds) were wanting to make the lunar year correspond to the course of the sun, he appointed that every other year an extraordinary month, called Mensis Intercalaris, or Macedonius, should be inserted between the 23d and 24th day of February, Liv. i. 19. The intercalating of this month was left to the judgment of the Pontifices, who by inserting fewer or more days, caused the current year to be shorter or longer as was best suited to themselves or those for whom they were interested ; as, for example, a magistrate might earlier or later resign his office, or contractors for the revenue might have a longer or a shorter time to collect the taxes. Cic. de Legg. ii. 12 ; Fam. vii. 3, 12, viii. 6 ; Suet. Cæs. 40 ; Dio. xl. 62. In consequence of this license the months were transposed from their stated seasons ; the winter months carried back into autumn, and the autumnal into summer, Cic. Att. x. 17. This disorder, as well as its sources, was removed by Cæsar. See above, Note 1.

45. Variorum. Because diversified in their names, times, and duties.

46. Lucifer. For dies.

47. Tria Verba. The power of the prætor in the administration of justice was expressed in these three words, Do, Dico, ADDICO. Prætor DABAT actionem et judices ; the prætor gave the form of a writ for trying and redressing a particular wrong complained of, and appointed judges or a jury to decide the cause ; DICEBAT jus, pronounced sentence ; ADDICEBAT bona vel damna, adjudged the goods of the debtor to the creditor &c. The days on which the prætor administered justice were called DIES FASTI, (a fando, quod iis diebus hæc tria verba fari licebat.) Those days on which it was unlawful to administer justice, were called NEFASTI.

49. Toto. Some days were of a mixed character, called intercisi ; when a sacrifice was appointed for a particular day, during the time of its celebration the day was considered nefastus, but after it was concluded the remaining portion was reckoned dies fastus, and the usual business attended to accordingly.

52. Honoratus. Honourable This title was conferred upon the

Est quoque, quo populum jus est includere Septis :

Est quoque, qui nono semper ab orbe redit.

Vindicat Ausonias Junonis cura Kalendas.

PRÆTOR URBANUS, as he held a higher rank than the PRÆTOR PEREGRINUS; his laws and edicts were called JUS HONORARIUM.

53. Quo populum, &c. This is the Dies Comitialis upon which the Comitia were held for the election of magistrates, &c. Septis. The septum or ovile was an enclosure surrounded with boards (locus tabulatis inclusus) near the tribunal of the consul, into which the centuries went according to their order, when summoned by the herald. Hence they were said to be intro vocatæ, sc. in ovile, Liv. x. 13. There was a narrow passage to it raised from the ground, called Pons or Ponticulus, by which each century ascended successively.—Suet. Jul. 80. Old men of sixty, sexagenarii, were said in consequence de ponte dejici; and were called Depontani, because after that age they were exempted from public business. There were probably as many Pontes and Septa, or orilia, as there were tribes and centuries, whence they are generally spoken of in the plural as above, also Cic. de Legg. iii. 17, Attic. i. 14, ad Herenn. i. 12, pro Mil. 15, Lucan. Pharsal. ii. 197.

54. Qui nono, &c. Every ninth day was called Dies Nundinalis, upon which the Nundinæ, (quasi Novendinæ from novem dies), were held. The ancient Romans did not divide their time into weeks, as we do in imitation of the Jews. The country people came to Rome every ninth day, to hold a market for buying and selling the usual commodities. The seven intervening days, a space of time which there is not any particular term to denote, they employed in rural occupations. Dionys. ii. 18, vii. 58;

Varro de Re Rust. præf. II. By the Hortensian law, the nundinæ, which used to be considered as feriæ or holidays, became fastæ, or court days, that the country people who then came to town for market might have their lawsuits determined. (Lites componerent.) Macrobius. When the nundinæ fell on the first day of the year it was considered unlucky, Dio. xl. 47. Macrobius. Sat. i. 13; for this reason, Augustus, who was greatly inclined to superstition, inserted a day in the preceding year to prevent it, which day was subtracted from the following years, that the time might agree with the arrangement of Julius Cæsar. Orbe, Day.

55. Vindicat. Claims, asserts a right to; the Kalends were sacred to Juno, the Ides to Jupiter. The Romans divided their months into three parts, by Kalends, Nones, and Ides. The first day was called KALENDÆ or calendæ, (a calendo vel vocando) from the priest proclaiming to the people the new moon; the fifth day, NONÆ the nones; the 13th, IDUS, the ides, from the obsolete verb idurare, to divide; because the ides divided the month. The nones were so called, because counting inclusively they were nine (novem) days from the ides.

In March, May, July, and October, the nones fell on the 7th, and the ides on the 15th. The first day of the intercalary month was called KALENDÆ INTERCALARES, Cic. Quint. 25 Sextæ Kalendæ, i. e. Kalendæ sexti mensis, the first day of June. Fast. vi. 181. See the Kalendarium.

— Ausonias. Latin or Roman. The Greeks had no kalends in their mode of reckoning, but called the first day of the month νοῦμηνια, or new moon; hence ad Græcas kalendas solvere, for nunquam. Suet. Aug. 87.

56. Cadit. Cadet, Ursinus.

57. Nonarum. An Hypallage, for Nonæ tutela Dei carent.

— Istis. The kalends, nones, and ides.

58. Ater. Inauspicious. cap. 1.

59. Omen, &c. The augury is the result of experience. The Romans had their præliares, fighting days, and non præliares; as, the days after the kalends, nones, and ides: they believed that there was something unlucky in the word post, after, and for this reason they were called dies religiosi, atri vel infausti, as were also the days, alluded to in the text, upon which any remarkable calamity had occurred; for instance, Dies Allien-sis, &c. Liv. vi. 1.

61. Hærentia. Connected with the calendar throughout, common to all the months.

62. Scindere. To interrupt. Condere Ursin. Findere. Al.

63. Ecce, &c. They were accustomed to look for favorable auguries and auspices on the kalends of January.

64. Adest. Erit. Al. 65. Biceps. Bifrons. Al.

66. Tua terga vides. Ἡσέσσω καὶ ὀπίσσω, because of his being biceps.

69. Tuis. Tui Burm.

70. Resera. The temple of Janus, built by Numa, (index belli et pacis,) had two brazen gates, one on each side, to be open in war, and shut in time of peace. Liv. i. 19. Vel. ii. 38. Serv. in Virg. i. 294. vii. 607. But the poet must not be understood by using the word re-sera, throw open, &c. here, as if anxious for a renewal of the hostilities upon whose cessation, he congratulates his country; he demands that the gates should be opened of all the temples, that of Janus included, to admit the soci-fices.

Et tremulum summâ spargit in æde jubar.

The temple of Janus was shut only once during the republic, at the end of the first Punic war, A. U. 529; three times by Augustus (Janum Quirinum, i. e. Templum Jani belli potentis, ter clausit, Suet. Aug. 22. Janum Quirini, Hor. Od. iv. 15, 9,) first after the battle of Actium, and the death of Antony and Cleopatra, A. U. 725. Dio. li. 20; a second time after the Cantabrian war, A. 729, Dio. liii. 26. About the third time authors are not agreed. Some suppose this temple to have been built by Romulus, and only enlarged by Numa; hence they understand Janus Quirini, as the temple of Janus built by Romulus. Macrob. Sat. i. 9.

71. Prospera. Happy, favorable, from Gr. πρόσφρος, utilis.

— Linguis, &c. ἑυφημισί. This was a customary injunction at sacrifices; a word of ill omen spoken during their celebration on the kalends of January was supposed to influence the whole succeeding year.

72. Nunc, &c. Now, on this happy day, auspicious language must be used.

74. Differ, &c. Put off thy task, thou slanderous tongue.

75. Odoratis. Sweet-scented, odoriferous; from the burning of the incense and aromatics upon the altars.

76. Sonet. Crackles. Spica. [from σπαχυς; Æolicé σπαχυς.]

Spikenard, a fragrant plant which grows in Cilicia a province of Asia Minor. According to Facciolati, spica means the crocus, 'cujus cacumen in capillamenta et fibra aristarum similia desinit.' The latter interpretation is probably the more correct, as Cilicia is celebrated for the crocus. Prima nobilitas est croco Cilicio, et ibi in Coryco monte, deinde Lycio monte Olympos; mox Centuripino Siliciæ. Plin. l. 21. c. 6, 20. Stat. l. 5. Silv. 3, v. 41, and Fast. v. 317. Violas arere videres, Filæque puniceæ languida facta croci. Spica means also the chives of a flower.

77. Verberat. Irradiates, aurum, the gilded ceilings or the golden ornaments of the temples. Verberat. Farnes. and Vatican. and in the following line, spargit.

78. Et tremulum, &c. Ceilings were frequently decorated with ivory, and fretted or tormented into raised work and hollows, (laqueata tecta, Cic. legg. ii. l. Laquearia vel Lacunaria, from lacus or lacuna, the hollow interstice between the beams, Serv. in Virg. Æn. l. 726), gilt (aurea, ibid. and Horat. 79 Intactis. i. e. integris. New. Tarpeias arces. The Mons Capitolinus, upon which the Capitol, or temple of Jupiter, was built, was originally called Saturnius, from its having been the abode of Saturn. Justin. xliii. l. It derived the name Tarpeius, from Tarpeia a Vestal virgin who was killed there by the Sabines, to whom she had betrayed the citadel, V. infra. 261, and Liv. i. II. 38, and to whom subsequently that mount was assigned to dwell in.

— Itur. The consuls were conducted by the senate and people, to be installed, to the Capitol, on the kalends of January. In the beginning of the republic, the consuls had no stated time for entering upon their office. The day first appointed was the 23d or 24th of February, (vii. or vi. Kal. Mart.) the day Tarquin was said to have been expelled. Fast. ii. 571, which was held as a festival, and called Regifugium ; afterwards on the 1st of August, (Kal. Sext.) which was at that time the beginning of the year, (i. e. of the consular, not of the civil year, which always began with January) Liv. iii. 6. In the time of the Decenviri, on the 15th of May (Id. Maii), ib. 36. About 50 years after, on the 15th of December, (Id. Decemb.) Liv. iv. 37, v. II. Then on the 1st of July, (Kal. Quintil.) Liv. v. 32. viii. 20, which continued until near the beginning of the second Punic war, A. U. 530, when the 15th of March was the day appointed. Finally, A. U. 598 or 600, (Q. Fulvio & T. Annio Coss.) it was transferred to the first of January (in Kal. Jan.) which was observed ever after. (DIES SOLENNIS magistratibus ineundis,) Liv. Epist. 47. Fast. iii. 145.

— Ebur. The Sella Curulis, or curule chair, so called because it was carried in the chariots of the Magistratus Curules, such as the consuls, prætors, censors, and chief ædiles, to the senate-house, and the rostra, or tribunal of Justice, where they used this seat in token of pre-eminence. It was a stool or seat without a back (anaclinterium, vel tabulatum a tergo surgens in quod reclinari possit), with four crooked feet, fixed to the extremities of cross pieces of wood joined by a common axis, somewhat in the form of the letter X (decussatim), and covered with leather ; so that it might occasionally be folded up for the convenience of carriage, and set down wherever the magistrates chose to use it, Plutarch. in Mar. Suet. Aug. 43. Gell. vi. 9. It was decorated with ivory, hence called curule ebur. Horat. Ep. i. 6, 53. It was borrowed from the Tuscans. Liv. i. 8 ; Hor. i. 5.

They were not able to comprehend how something could be produced out of nothing, and being powerfully struck with the beauty and admirable structure of the universe, they attributed it to a being superior to nature, or to nature itself, which exercised this salutary influence over preexistent but confused and undistinguished matter. According to their view, God was not a creator, but an architect, who modified the already existing material, and arranged the disposition of the elements according to their respective qualities. This is the chaos of the profane writers of antiquity, who took Hesiod as their model. See Theog. init. Hesiod, again, is supposed with good reason to have copied Sanchoniathon, who wrote his annals previous to the Trojan war, and who boasts of having received his account of the creation from a priest of Jehovah, called Jerombal. This author wrote in the Phœnician language, and we have only a translation of his work by Philo, which is looked on by the learned with considerable suspicion. However, there is a strong probability that the Greeks borrowed their chaos from him, and afterwards intermixed it with fables of their own. Through all the fanciful absurdities of the Greek and Latin Poets, it is easy to discover traces of the Mosaic account of the creation; from whose severe and sublime simplicity, wide as have been their extravagant deviations, still in this, as in numerous other instances in the heathen mythology, the piercing light of divine truth is easily observed to break in upon the 'gross darkness' of profane fiction.

Cardinis means the pole or axis round which the earth is supposed to revolve.

121. Pacem. When Romulus was engaged with the Sabines, near the Collis Viminalis, a great quantity of hot water, or according to others, of fire, is said to have issued from the ground, where the temple of Janus was afterwards erected, and put them to the rout. See infr. 270. Hence the custom is supposed to have originated of opening the temple in time of war, and closing it during peace. This absurd legend, however, is rejected by the more sensible writers. See Spence's Polymetis. Dial. 12 ; Virg. Æneid 7, 601-622.

— Tectis. Temple.

Theb. ii. 478. Ambulo is derived from Gr. ἀμολω, which Pindar, who wrote in the Doric dialect, as well as others, used for ἀναμολω, which has the sense of ἀναστρέφω, to turn back ; hence the distinction between ire and ambulare ; the former meaning to set out and continue the route ; the latter to go a certain distance and return again.

123. Miscebitur. Shall be confounded.

124. Nî teneant, &c. Unless the solid bolts restrain the imprisoned wars.

125. Præsideo foribus. Macrobius (lib. 1. Saturn.) gives as the origin of this opinion among the ancients, their having conceived Janus to be the sun, and therefore double-faced, as the Lord of the eastern and western gate of heaven ; the former of which he rose to open, and closed the latter when he set. Hence Horace applies to Janus the epithet matutinus. Lib. ii. Sat. 6.

Valerius Flaccus makes them attend that Deity at his setting out, Val. Flac. iv. 94 ; and Statius at his coming in. Theb. iii. 414. As they all agree in making the hours the attendants and servants of Sol, it is natural that they should be stationed with Janus, at the gates of heaven, to be in readiness to accompany the chariots of the sun when setting out on his daily course. 127. Cui cum. Mihi cum, Bernens.

— Cereale. Wheaten, lit. Of or belonging to Ceres. Ceres, the goddess of corn and husbandry, was the sister of Jupiter, daughter of Saturn and Ops. She was worshipped chiefly at Eleusis in Greece, and in Sicily. Her sacred rites were celebrated, at the former especially, with the strictest secrecy, Horat. Od. iii. 2, 27, and by torch-light ; whence, et per tædiferæ mystica sacra Deæ, Ovid Ep. ii. 42. The wicked, scælesti, were excluded from them by the voice of the herald ; even Nero, when in Greece, did not dare to profane them. Suet. Ner. 34. The Libum mentioned in the text was called Janual, being of a species which was exclusively offered to Janus.

All things are blooming then ; then time is young, and the young bud is swelling on the teeming bough. The tree is just enfolded by the fashioned vine ; the corn-blade clears the surface of the soil ; the birds, with their sweet chirpings, soothe the genial air, while the herds sport and revel in the fields. The suns are temperate then ; the stranger swallow comes and builds beneath the lofty roof his nest of clay ; and then the land submits to tillage, and is renewed by the plough : This should be justly called the opening of the year.

Lest in consequence of consulting the auspices on the first day of the year, the rest of it might be devoted to a similar gratification of indolence, foret iners, to the prejudice of the ordinary and necessary business of life; or, lest there being no business done on that day, it might be ominous of inactivity throughout the year.

169. Quisque suas, &c. Expl. Each touches slightly upon the business of his peculiar occupation, and so affords an evidence (testificatur) of what the duties may be of his customary task

180. Consulit. Observes, so as to be enabled to interpret the augury. Augur. The Augures, antiently called Auspices, Plutareh, Q. Rom. 72, are supposed to have been instituted by Romulus, three in number, one to each tribe, Liv. x. 6, as the Haruspices, Dionys. ii. 22. And confirmed by Numa, ibid. 64. A fourth was added, probably by Servius Tullius, when he divided the city into four tribes. They derived tokens, signa, of futurity from five sources chiefly; from appearances in the heavens, as

185. Carica. A kind of dry fig, a lenten fig; so called from Caria, a country in Asia Minor, now called Anadolia, between Lycia and Ionia, on the side of Mount Taurus. It was celebrated for figs. Dates, figs, honey, and sometimes a piece of coin, (stips, of the same value with the as.) were the usual new year's gifts (strenæ) at Rome. This custom was prevalent in the time of Augustus. Sueton. lib. v. cap. 42.

190. Labet. May be wanting. Labo—as.

191. O quam te fallunt, &c. How ignorant you are of the habits of your own times.

193. Saturno. Saturn, the god of time, was the son of Cœlus or Uranus, and Terra or Vesta. Having been dethroned by his son Jupiter, he fled into Italy, and gave name to Latium by being concealed there (a latendo). He was kindly received by Janus, then king of that country. Under Saturn is supposed to have been the golden age, alluded to in the text, Virg. Geor. i. 125, which, however, does not appear to have been altogether divested of the ‘auri sacra fames.’

201. Jupiter. The statue of Jove. Vix totus. Scarcely stood erect from the contracted size of his temple. It is most probable that allusion is made here to the temple of Jupiter Feretrius, built by Romulus, which was scarcely sixteen feet wide. Dionys, Halic. lib. ii. οὐ μέγαν ἔτι γὰρ αὐτὸν σώζεται ἀρχαῖον ἱεῖος, &c. Further, the statue of Jupiter Capitolinus was in a sitting posture, as appears from the coins, and also the well-known practice of placing a laurel branch in the lap of the statue on the occasion of a triumph. Dio. lib. LIV. By a similar argument,

Strabo (lib. xiii.) proves the Pal-ladium to have been in a like position at Ilium, "Ὁμηρος γὰρ, he writes, πῖπλον κελύβει 'Θεῖναι' Ἀθηναίης ἐπὶ γούνασιν."

202. Fictile fulmen. An earthen bolt. Dextra ; for he had his sceptre in his left.

208. Levis-lamina. A small ingot of silver was considered a scandal to be possessed of. There was a law which confined the amount of property to five pounds of silver at the utmost.

210. Et tetigit. So Horace ; Sublimi feriam sidera vertice. Od. i. l. 36.

211. Opum furioso cupido. The inordinate desire of wealth.

215. Quibus. Those affected with dropsy.

217. In pretio pretium—est. Money now is highly prized. Dat census honores. He touches here upon a complaint very common in his time. Plin. Proem. lib. xiv.

221. Æra. The first brass coin (nummus vel numus æris, a Numa rege vel a νόμος lex) was called AS or ÆS, antiently assis, and was of a pound weight. A golden coin was first struck at Rome in the second Punic war, in the consulship of C. Claudius Nero and M. Livius Salinator, A. U. 546, called AUREUS or aureus nummus, equal in value to twenty-five denarii. The denarius was a silver coin of the value of ten asses, or ten pounds of brass ; Deni æris, sc. asses. See Lanktree's Roman Antiquities, Book v. chap. vii. Melius nunc omen in auro est. Nunc jacet æs, aurum in summum successit honorem. Lucret. l. 1, 274.

222. Moneta. So called from Juno Moneta, in whose temple at Rome the money was coined. She was called Moneta from monere, because the Romans, being in want of money in the war against Pyrrhus, prayed to her for aid, and she advised them to act justly if they wished for success, which having obtained, they began to worship Juno under the title of Moneta, i. e. consultrix, and decreed that the coin should be struck in her temple. Suidas in Μονήτα.

225. Sed nostris, &c. But we adopt the manners of our own times.

229. Navalis. To the reason assigned for this in the text, may be added that of Draco Corcyræus, who in his treatise, Περὶ λιθων, states Janus to have been the inventor of ships. See Adams' R. Antiquities, p. 456.

232. Extenuasset. Damaged by effacing the impression of the coinage, opus. Vetus dies for vetustas.

233. Tuscum. The Tiber, which flows through Etruria into the Tuscan Sea.

234. Falcifer. Saturn, who was always depicted with a scythe, Curvam servans sub imagine fulcem. Virg. Æneid vii. 172.

 Et clavem ostendens, ' hæc,' ait, ' arma gero.'

 Voce meâ voces eliciente Dei :
 ' Cùm tot sint Jani, cur stas sacratus in uno,

241. Solum. Etruria.

244. Tantaque res. The seat of so great an empire ; the site of so grand a city.

245. Arx. Janiculum. Hanc Janus pater, hanc Saturnus condidit arcem, Janiculum huic, illi fuit Saturnia nomen. Virg. Æneid viii. 357. This citadel was also called Antipolis.

245. Cultrix. Pious, religious.

247. Tunc ego. According to Macrobius, Janus had a partner in the sovereignty of Italy, Cameses, after whom it was agreed mutually, that the country should be called Camesene, and the town after Janus, Janiculum. Macrobius Saturn. lib. i. cap. 7.

— Patiens cùm. Before mankind had put the gods to flight by their crimes.

248. Humanis. The deities were still inhabiting the earth.

249. Justitiam. Called elsewhere Astræa ; so in Metam.

252. Justis. Thuscis. Moret.

257. Cum tot sint. Some explain Jani by temples, others by statues ; it is well known, however, that Janus had but one principal temple at Rome, therefore the tot Jani may be understood as buildings in which there were thoroughfares ; as transitiones perviæ, are also called Jani ; (see supr. 99 ; ) and the poet may be supposed to ask why the deity is worshipped in but one, when there were so many edifices suited to him in their structure ; his being bifrons inferring the necessity of their being perviæ. There is no need of insisting either on a plurality of statues ; the passage in Horace, Janus summus ab imo, Ep. i. l. 54, meaning merely the street Janus from end to end ; medius, Sat. ii. 3, 18, the centre

 Ad summæ Tatium duxerit arcis iter.
 ‘ Inde, velut nunc est, per quem descenditis,’ inquit,
 ‘ Arduus in valles et fora clivus erat.
 ‘ Et jam contigerat portam ; Saturnia cujus 265

 ‘ Cum tanto veritus committere numine pugnam,

of it. Livy mentions the Jani in the Forum, lib. xli. Curavit in his et cloacam circumducendam, et forum porticibus tabernisque claudendum, et Janos tres faciendos; whence the learned conclude that the Jani are to be understood as marble arches, or thoroughfares with groined roofs. The sense of the passage then may be; why, when there were so many places adapted for his reception, did he adhere to the temple which he already occupied, close, juncta, to the two Fora, duobus foris, the Boarium, or cattle-market and the Piscarium, or fish-market? Janus then proceeds to assign the reason.

258. Templa. The ground where this stood was called also Lautolæ; a larando, from the legend of the flood of hot water already mentioned.

260. Titi. Titus Tatius was king of the Sabines, and conducted the war against Romulus. He was called Œbalus, from Œbalus, who gave the name Œbalia to Laconia, from whence a colony had come and settled among the aboriginal Sabines.

261. Levis custos. The faithless guard. Tarpeia, the daughter of Tarpeius, who commanded the Roman citadel, caught, it is said, with the beauty of the bracelets which the Sabines wore upon their left arms, bargained for them by betraying the citadel.

262. Arcis. The Capitol was called Arx, (ab arceo quod is sit locus munitissimus urbis, a quo facillimè possit hostis prohiberi, Varr. L. L. iv. 32, vel ab ἀκρος summus;) because it was the highest part of the city, and strongly fortified. See Lanktree's Rom. Antiq. p. 14.

263. Per quem desc. Per quæ desc. Excerpt. Kloek. descendimus. Excerpt. Voss.

264. Clivus. From Gr. κλίτης Æol. κλίτης, declivitas, a slope.

265. Portam. The Porta Viminalis; so called from the thickets of osiers which grew there, (vimineta) Varr. L. l. iv. 8. Juvenal iii. 71, or Fagutalis, from the circumstance mentioned in the text.

— Saturnia. Juno; the possessive for the patronymic. She was the daughter of Saturn, and sister and wife of Jupiter. Her enmity against the Romans was owing to their Trojan origin. See Virg. Æneid i. 25–6, and the fated overthrow of her favorite Carthage by the Roman arms; Progeniem sed enim Trojanam a sanguine duci Audierat Tyrias olim quæ verteret arcēs.—Ibid.

266. Seras. Bolts. Qu. from σείρα, catena, a chain.

267. Tanto. Juno, who was so prone to the gratification of her passion for revenge.

- ‘ Ipse meæ movi callidus artis opus :
 ‘ Oraque, quâ pollens ope sum, fontana reclusi ;
 ‘ Sumque repentinas ejaculatus aquas. 270

 ‘ Ara mihi posita est parvo conjuncta sacello ;
 ‘ Hæc adolet flammis cum strue farra suis.’
 ‘ At cur pace lates, motisque recluderis armis ?
 ‘ Nec mora, quæsiti reddita causa mihi.
 ‘ Ut populo reditus pateant ad bella profecto,

 Aspexit toto quidquid in orbe fuit.
 Pax erat ; et vestri, Germanice, causa triumphii 285
 Tradiderat famulas jam tibi Rhenus aquas.

268. Meæ Callidus artis opus. Calliditatis opem. Thuan. Moret.
 — Movi. I attempted an exploit peculiar to my office or profession, i. e. of opening and shutting. Opus, from ἔπω facio. Artis, from αἴσθησις, by sync. virtus.

269. Oraque, &c. I opened, by the power through which I prevail, the fountain springs, &c.

271. Gelidis. Mediis. Burmann.

— Subjeci. I mingled, sulphura, sulphur, (qu. ἐλπις, from ἐλπίς, totus, and πῦρ, ignis, or from sal and πῦρ.) to make the water boil. De calido sulphure fumat aqua. Ovid. Venis. Vena is properly applied to metal and stone, &c. ; here it means a rill of water. Ne male fœcundæ vena periret aquæ. Ovid. Trist.

272. Clauderet, &c. That the boiling flood might check the passage of Tatus.

274. Quæque fuit, &c. The appearance of the whole place was restored to what it was.

275. Ara mihi posita. Ponitur ara mihi, Heins.

— Sacello. Sacellum, or Ædícula, was a small temple or chapel.

276. Adolet. Consumes. Strues —is, from struo, a species of cake. Fest. Jano struem commoveto. Catull. Farra. Farrea liba ; mola salsae ; cakes made of salt, water, and flour. Suis. Spontaneous.

277. Lates. Are you concealed, i. e. by the closing of the temple. Motis. Whoever was appointed to the conduct of the war, entered the temple of Mars, and shook the shield and spear of the Deity, crying out ‘ Mars vigila’—awake!

282. Nomine. Numine. Francof.

— Clausus. See note 67.

283. Diversa. Before and behind.

286. Rhenus. By Rhenus, we are to understand those who inhabited Germany on the Rhine ; the scene of the conquests of Drusus. Germanicus triumphed over the Cherusci, Chatti, and Jane, face æternos, Pacem, Pacisque ministros ;

Neve suum, præsta, deserat auctor opus.

Altius humanis exseruisse caput. 300

Angrivarii, A. U. 769. Famulas aquas. Its subservient waters.

287. Ministros. Obviously Tiberius and Germanicus ; but it may be easily inferred that Augustus, who was still living when the triumph was decreed to the two former, was included in this prayer of the poet for the immortality of the ministers of peace.

288. Præsta. Grant that the founder may not abandon (dese- rat) his office, i. e. by death.

290. Hac die. On the kalends of January. Duo templa. One to Jupiter, the other to Æsculapius, who was the son of Apollo and the nymph Coronis, called also Arsinoë, daughter of Phlegias, or according to some, of Leucippus. She was slain by Apollo, who was informed of her intriguing with Ischis, son of Elatus of Thessaly, by a raven. He took Æsculapius from her womb alive, and gave him in charge to Chiron the centaur, who instructed his pupil in medicine, &c. The raven's feathers are said to have then been changed from their original white to black, in sign of mourning for the death of the nymph.

292. Insula. An island which the river (Tiber) encloses with its divided stream.

293. Jupiter in parte est. A temple upon the same island was consecrated to Jupiter. In parte, may signify to occupy a share of, or the half.

296. Promissi. Propositi. Al. See l. 2, supr.

207. Felices animæ. Animos. Voss. Arund. and others. Animos or animas Heins. Quibus, &c. Astronomers.

299. Credibile est, &c. It is to be supposed that those who made the heavens the subject of their studious contemplation, were raised in thought, by their aspirings after celestial knowledge, equally above the crimes as the localities of earth.

Non venus et vinum sublimia pectora fregit,
 Officiumve fori, militiæve labor.
 Nec levis ambitio, perfusaque gloria fuco,
 Magnarumve fames sollicitavit opum.
 Admovère oculis distantia sidera nostris ; 305
 Ætheraque ingenio supposuere suo.
 Sic petitur cælum ; non ut ferat Ossan Olympus, Summaque Peliacus sidera tangat apex.
 Nos quoque sub ducibus cælum metabimur illis,
 Ponemusque suos ad stata signa dies. 310
 Ergo ubi nox aderit venturis tertia Nonis,
 Sparsaque cælesti rore madebit humus :
 Octipedis frustra quærentur brachia Cancri ;
 Præceps occiduas ille subivit aquas.

301. Sublimia. "To heaven erect." Sublimis qu. supra linum. A very interesting discussion upon the subject of this etymology is to be found in the Appendix to Stewart's Philosophical Essays. Fregit. Has brought low, weakened. Compare Horat. lib. ii. sat. 2. 77—quin corpus onustum, Hesternis vitiis animum quoque prægravat una, Atque affigit humo divinæ particulam auræ.

303. Fuco. Overspread with paint, and therefore deceptive. Fucus. lit. The herb red alkanet or elkanet, which was used for rouge and also for dyeing.

304. Fames. Furor Voss.

306. Ætheraque, &c. Brought the visible heavens, as it were, within the scope of their intellectual powers.

307. Sic petitur cælum. Thus heaven is won ; not by such efforts as those of Otus and Ephialtes, who tried to reach the skies by the means alluded to in the text. Ter sunt conati imponere Pelio Ossam, Scilicet, atque Ossæ frondosum involvere Olympum. Virg. Geor. i. 281. Ossa, now called Kissovo, Pelion, now called Plesnid, and Olympus, which still retains its ancient name, were high mountains in Thessaly.

310. Ponemusque, &c. We shall arrange their own peculiar days according to the appointed celestial signs.

311. Ubi nox. That is, three nights before the nones of January.

312. Rore. The morning dew. Madescit, madescet Heins.

313. Frustra. Because on the third day of January, towards sunrise, Cancer sets cosmically. Cancer, the Crab, is said to have been enrolled among the constellations by the kindness of Juno, after he had been crushed by Hercules, whose foot he had bitten while engaged in combat with the Hydra in the marshes of Lerna. Hygin. Fab.

314. Aquas. Because of the stars appearing, when they set, to sink into the sea.

NON. JAN. LYRA ORITUR.

INSTITERINT Nonæ ; missi tibi nubibus atris
Signa dabunt imbres, exoriente Lyrâ.

315

QUINT. ID. JAN. JANI AGONALIA.

QUATUOR adde dies ductis ex ordine Nonis,
Janus Agonali luce piandus erit.

Nominis esse potes succinctus causa minister,
Hostia cœlitibus quo feriente cadit :

320

Qui calido strictos tincturus sanguine cultros,
Semper, ' Agone ? ' rogat ; nec nisi jussus agit.

Pars, quia non veniant pecudes, sed agantur, ab actu
Nomen Agonalem credit habere diem.

Pars putat hoc festum priscis Agnalia dictum ;
Una sit ut proprio littera dempta loco.

An, quia prævisos in aquâ timet hostia cultros,

315. Institerint nonæ. When the nones have arrived.

316. Signa dabunt imbres.— (Sign. d. Nonæ Al. and Nonæ signa dabunt.) The rain and storms announce the arrival of the nones, on which Lyrâ, called also 'fidicula,' rises heliacally. Lyrâ. Supposed to be the lyre with which Orpheus charmed the Manes in his descent to Hell.

317. Quatuor adde, &c. Add four days to the nones (gone by in order, ἡμερῶν) which brings us to the fifth of the ides, or the ninth of Jan. See the Kalendarium, in which it shall also appear that the Romans counted backwards, owing to their computing the day of the month by finding its distance from the kalends, nones, or ides following ; for example, the 2d of Jan. was quarto nonas, or quarto nonarum Jan. i.e. the fourth day before the nones ; Jan. the 6th was octavo idus, the eighth day before the ides, and Jan. 14th, was undevig. kal. Feb. the nineteenth day before the kalends of February.

318. Agonali luce. On the Agonalian day ; the festival on which the Agonia, or victim κατ, ἑξοχῆν, the finest of the flock was sacrificed to Janus. The etymologies of the term agonalis, are given in the succeeding lines.

319. Succinctus. Tightly girt, to be the less embarrassed in the performance of the sacrifice. Nominis, &c. You, well-girded priest, may be the origin of this phrase, beneath whose blows the victim falls in honour of the gods. Minister. The Rex sacrificulus.

322. Agone. Do I strike ? Varro approves of this as the word that gave name to the rite.

325. Agnalia. This conjecture appears more ingenious than probable, for it was not a lamb, agna, that was offered upon this occasion, but a ram, aries, and that too the best of the flock.

327. Timet. Ἀγωνιάω is the Gr. for the metu angor of the Latins, and synonymous with timet in the text ; hence the poet offers another probable derivation.

— Aqua. The water used for ablutions at the sacrifices.

A pecoris lux est ista notata metu ?
 Pars etiam, fieri solitis ætate priorum
 Nomina de ludis Graia tulisse diem. 330
 Et pecus antiquis dicebat Agonia sermo :
 Veraque iudicio est ultima causa meo.
 Utque ea nunc certa est ; ita Rex placare sacrorum
 Numina lanigeræ conjuge debet ovis.
 Victima, quæ dextrâ cecidit victrice, vocatur ; 335
 Hostibus a domitis hostia nomen habet.
 Antè, Deos homini quod conciliare valeret,
 Far erat, et puri lucida mica salis.
 Nondum pertulerat lacrymatas cortice myrrhas

329. Pars etiam, &c. Some too believe that the day derived a Grecian title from games that used to be celebrated in the days of their forefathers.

330. Graia. Ἀγών, certamen ; Hercules is said to have instituted the Ludi Agonales in Elis.

331. Et pecus, &c. The ancient dialect called a victim, agonia ; to which Ovid gives the preference as the origin of the term in question.

333. Rex—sacrorum. The Rex sacrificulus ; a priest appointed by direction of the consul Brutus, after the expulsion of Tarquin, to perform the sacred rites, which formerly were the province of the kings themselves. It was an office of trivial importance, and subject to the Pontifex Maximus, as the other priests were, Liv. ii. 2, Dionys. iv. 74, v. 1. Before any one was admitted to this priesthood, he was obliged to resign whatever other office he was engaged in, Liv. xl. 52. His wife was called Regina, Macrobian Suet. i. 15, and his house anciently Regia, Serv. in Virg. Æneid. viii. 363.

335. Victima, &c. In this and the following lines the poet gives the origin of the terms victimæ, and hostia ; the former being so called from dextra victrix, the victorious right-hand of a conqueror ; the latter, hostibus amotis, from the repulse of an enemy. Amotis, A domitis Al.

337. Ante. Formerly ; before the Roman empire had attained to the height of its splendour and fame.

338. Mica. From Gr. μίκρος, Dor. for μικρός, parvus. A crumb or grain. Salt was held in great veneration by the ancients. The table, at their feasts, was always consecrated by setting on it the images of the Lares and salt-holders, (salinorum appositu) Arnob. ii. It was used in their sacrifices, Horat. Od. iii. 23, 20 ; Plin. xxvi. 7, s. 41. So Moses likewise ordained, Levit. ii. 13. It appears to have been used as generally by the ancient Romans, and for the same purposes (Plin. ib. Horat. Sat. ii. 2, 17), as cresses (nasturtium) were by the ancient Persians. The family salt-cellar (paternum salinum sc. vas) was preserved with great care, Horat. Od. ii. 16, 14. Et puri luc. Et liquidi luc. Al.

339. Lacrymatas cort. myrr. Myrrha is a sweet gum which drops from the rind (cortice) of a tree of the same name. Lacrymatas, Wept from ; —ὥστε πύκνον δάκρυ—Eurip. Med. 1197, “ Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees

Shaks. Othello.

Cortice, from corium and tego, because the bark covers, tegit, the tree like a hide, corium. For Myrrha, see Ovid. Metam. x. fab. 9. Her story has also furnished Alfieri with a subject for one of his finest tragedies.

340. Hospita. Foreign.

341. Thura. From Gr. θύρα, suffio, to perfume.—Frankincense, from Saba in Arabia Felix. Euphrates. From Gr. εὐφράτιν, to delight. A celebrated river of Mesopotamia, flowing eastward of Arabia Felix, into the Sinus Persicus. According to Strabo, it rises in Niphates, a mountain in Armenia, where some authors suppose the source of the Tigris to lie also. The stores of the east were conveyed by the Euphrates to other nations. Costum.—us, i. f. and um, i. n. Zeodary, a species of shrub that grows in Syria and Persia, whose root has a strong aromatic smell.

342. Fila. Filaments, fibres. See note 76, supr.

343. Herbis—Sabinis. The Herba Sabina, Savin, a shrub in its form and mode of growing, bearing a resemblance to the cypress.

344. Non exiguo. Because the leaves of the laurel or bay crackled in the fire ; the louder they did so the more favorable the omen was considered.

345. Factis. Plexis Al. Pactis Burm. as Plin. xxi. I. Pactilis corona ;—if plectilis be not the proper reading.

348. Nullum. Because the gods were not wont to be appeased with gifts, but sacrifices.

350. Ulta, &c. Avenging the ruin of her property by the merited death of the trespasser. Ovid Pont. ii. 9, 30. Metam. xv. iii.

351. Teneris lactentia succis. Swelling with young milky juices. Succis, from sugo, to suck. Many of the best copies read sulis.

352. Suis. Sus, from Gr. ῥῆς, σῆς, or θύς, which is the more ancient form, from θύω, to sacrifice ; whence Varro concludes that the sow was the first animal used in sacrifices.

357. Hinc. Hence, i. e. out of

359. Verba, &c. Truth attends the words, i. e. they are verified by the result. Noxæ. For punishment; in consequence of his offence. Cum lex jubet noxæ dedere, pro peccato dedi jubet. Festus. Hostis. Because of his destroying the vines.

361. Culpa sui nocuit, &c. Her crime was fatal to the sow, &c.

363. Flebat Aristæus. Having explained why sows and goats were offered up as victims to the deities, whose anger they had provoked, the poet proceeds to account for the sacrificing of oxen and unoffending sheep, placidæ oves. Aristæus was the son of Apollo and the nymph Cyrene, daughter of Peneus, a river of Thessaly; he was born in the deserts of Lybia, and reared by the Seasons, who fed him on nectar and ambrosia. After he had travelled over the greatest portion of the world, he settled in Greece, where he married Autonoe, the daughter of Cadmus, by whom he had a son, Actæon. He became enamoured of Eurydice, the wife of Orpheus, who in flying from him was stung by a serpent and died, in consequence of which, the gods destroyed all his bees. In his distress, he applied to his mother for counsel, who directed him to seize the sea-god, Proteus, and force him to tell how his losses might be repaired. The result is described in the text. See Virg. Georg. iv. 317. Quod apes, &c. Because he had seen that the bees, destroyed utterly, with their whole stock, had abandoned the comb they had begun to build. Cum stirpe necat. Cum prole necat. Francof.

365. Cærula. Marine. Qu. calulus, from calum. Cæreuleos habet unda Deos. Ovid. Metam. Ægre. Scarcely.

367. Proteus. A sea deity, son of Oceanus and Tethys, or according to some of Neptune and Phœnice. He received the gift of prophecy from Neptune, because he tended the monsters of the ocean. He usually resided in the Carpathian Sea, and like the other sea deities, often reposed on the shore, where those who wished to consult him, generally resorted. He was, however, difficult of access, and used to assume a great variety of shapes to elude his inquirers. He is said to have been consulted also by Menelaus and Hercules.

370. Vincula firma manus. Vinc. dura. man. Excerpt. Kloek.

373. Ille sua, &c. He, transformed, changes his appearance by his craft. Adulterat, from adulter, which is compounded of ad and alter, the term meaning ad alterum vel alteram ire.

377. Obrue mactati, &c. Bury in the ground the carcass of a slaughtered ox.

378. Dabit. The impression was very prevalent among the ancients, that the effect mentioned in the text should result from employing similar means.

379. Fervent examina, &c. Swarms burst forth from the putrid ox : one life destroyed gave existence to a thousand.

381. Poscit ovem fatum. The sheep also was demanded for the sacrifice. Verbenas improba, &c. It wantonly cropped the vervain which a devout old woman used to offer to the rustic deities. Verbenas, qu. herbenas, from herba. It is used to signify all sacred leaves, as laurel, olive, myrtle, rosemary, and other sweet herbs wherewith the altars were decorated.

382. Dis ruris. Bacchus, Ceres, &c.

385. Placat equo, &c. The Persian appeases with a horse Hyperion girded with rays, that a slow-footed victim may not be offered to a nimble god. Hyperiona, a son of Cœlus and Terra ; married to Thea, by whom he had Aurora, the sun and moon. Hyperion is often taken by the poets, as in the text, for the sun itself.

387. Quod semel, &c. Because a hind was once sacrificed to the triple Diana, instead of a virgin, now too the hind falls, but not instead of any. Triplici. See note, 141, supr. Virginæ. Iphigenia, daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. The Greeks on their route to Troy were detained at Aulis by contrary winds, for which the soothsayers accounted from the anger of Diana, at the loss of a favorite stag killed by Agamemnon. Chalcas declared that the goddess would only be appeased by the sacrifice of Iphigenia, to which her father was with difficulty prevailed on to consent. When the sacrifice was about to be performed Iphigenia disappeared, and a hind, or according to others, a goat, was found in her place, with which the goddess was content, and liberated the fleet.

388. Pro nulla. For there was no longer a virgin to be redeemed.

389. Canum. Dogs are said to have been sacrificed to Diana, because their barking scared away the ghosts and spectres which she sent on earth. Vidi. Probably when he was a wandering exile in Thrace, to which frequent allusion is made in the ‘Tristia.’ Sapæos. A people of Thrace, near Abdera, called also Sintii, and Saii.

390. Hæme. A high mountain which separates Thrace from Thessaly. It receives its name from Hæmus, son of Boreas and Orithyia, who married Rhodope, and was changed into this mountain for aspiring to divine honours. There is little doubt, however, but that the poet alludes here to the city Zerinthus, and the cave of Hecate, called also ‘Causantrum,’ in the neighbourhood of this mountain. He mentions this place in the ‘Tristia,’ and Suidas states that dogs were the ordinary sacrifice there to Hecate or Diana.

391. Intactæ. Unharmed. The poet now proceeds to account for the sacrifice of birds.

394. Et facili, &c. And warble sweet measures from your ready throat.

395. Quia linguæ, &c. Because you are accused of utterance, and the gods believe that you disclose their purposes. Nor is this without reason ; for as each is most familiar with the gods, now by your wings (sc. præpetes), now by your tongues (sc. oscines), you give true tokens of their will.

400. Indicis...sui. Of their interpreter.

401. Ergo sæpe, &c. Therefore oft, the snowy, wedded dove, torn away from her mate, is burned upon the glowing altars, i. e. of Venus.

403. Nec defensa juvant. When Rome was taken by the Gauls, Marcus Manlius, with a body of his countrymen, retired into the Capitol, which was attacked suddenly in the night time by the enemy ; their approach was discovered by the cackling of some geese which were kept in the temple of Juno, and they were successfully repulsed. Geese were ever after held sacred among the Romans.

404. Inachi.—is, idis. f. A patronymic of Io or Isis, daughter of Inachus, the son of Oceanus and Tethys, and founder of the kingdom of Argos, to one of whose rivers he gave his name. Io or Isis was esteemed a divinity by the Egyptians, and her priests usually feasted upon geese and ox-flesh ; the livers of the former were accounted a great delicacy, to which allusion may be made in the word lauta. Inache laute, Excerpt. KloeK.

405. Nocti. Nox, one of the most ancient deities of the heathens, was the daughter of Chaos. From her union with her brother Erebus she gave birth to the Day and the Light. She was also the mother of the Parcæ, Hesperides, Dreams, Discord, Death, Momus, &c. She had a celebrated statue in Diana's temple at Ephesus. Cristatus—ales. The cock, which was sacrificed to Nox for the reason stated in the text.

407. Interea. On the Agonian day ; the fifth of the ides. Delphin. According to some, this was the dolphin that carried Arion the famous lyric poet and musician to Tænarus, when he was thrown into the sea by the sailors, who wished to get possession of the riches which he had accumulated on his travels, and which he intended to carry home to his native island, Lesbos. See Fast. ii. 79—118. Others say that the dolphin was ranked among the constellations by Neptune, in gratitude for his success in persuading Amphitrite, who was unwilling at first, to become the bride of that deity.

408. Patriis...vadis. From his native seas. Exerit ora, i. e. exoritur, rises.

409. Postera. The fourth of the ides ; the tenth of January ; see the Kalendarium, Hyemem, &c. Divides the winter, and the remaining portion shall be equal to the past.

TERT. ID. JAN. CARMENTIS ET JUTURNÆ FESTA.

PROXIMA prospiciet Tithono Aurora relicto

Arcadiæ sacrum pontificale Deæ.

Te quoque lux eadem, Turni soror, æde recepit ;

Hic ubi Virgineâ Campus obitur aquâ.

Unde petam causas horum, moremque sacrorum ? 415

Diriget in medio quis mea vela freto ?

Ipsa mone, quæ nomen habes à carmine ductum ;

411. Proxima. The third of the ides; the eleventh of January.

— Aurora. Qu. aurea hora, from the golden hue of the sky at sunrise. The goddess Aurora was the daughter of Hyperion and Thia or Thea, or according to others, of Titan and Terra. She became enamoured, from his great beauty, of Tithonus, the son of Laomedon, king of Troy, by Strymo, the daughter of the river Scamander; and took him with her to heaven. She brought him two sons, Memnon and Æmation. Hesiod. Theog. 984. Horat. Od. i. 28. ii. 16. Aurora. Nupta, Heins. and Ursin.

412. Arcadiæ, &c. This was the festival called Carmentalia, in honour of Carmenta, a prophetess, the mother of Evander, king of Arcadia, who was obliged to leave his country, by the express command of the gods, and having arrived in Italy deprived the Aborigines of their ancient possessions, and reigned in that part of the country where Rome was afterwards founded. Carmenta was called also Themis and Nicostrata. Her festival was celebrated with peculiar pomp, sacrum pontificale, by the Pontifices themselves. Dionysius mentions the Romans having dedicated an altar to her at the Porta Carmentalis, (quam memorant Nymphæ priscum Carmentis honorem, Æn. viii. 239.) And Plutarch that she had a temple in the Forum which was consecrated to her by the Roman matrons. The day on which the Carmentalia were held, was a dies intercisus, see n. 49, or half-holiday, for after mid-day it was considered a dies profestus, a common work day.

413. Turni soror. Juturna, daughter of Daunus, sister of Turnus, king of the Rutuli, whom Jupiter requited with immortality for the loss of her chastity. Virg. Æneid, xii. 878. Æde. This temple was in the Campus Martius, near the Virgin's aqueduct.

414. Virginea. According to P. Victor, there were twenty aqueducts at Rome; others allow only fourteen. They were named after the individual constructing them, the place from which the water was brought, or some other circumstances; thus Aqua Claudia, Appia, Nervia, &c. Virginea aqua. (Virgineus liquor, Ovid. Pont. i. 8. 38.) So called, because a girl pointed out certain rills, which the workmen following found a great quantity of water, Frontin; but others account for it differently. Plin. xxxi. 3. Cassiodor. vii. Epist. 6. Made by Agrippa, Dio. liv. 14, as several others were, Suet. Aug. 42. Dio. xlviii. 32. xlix. 14, 42.

416. Diriget. Porriget, Gotthorp. Dirigat, Burm. See supr. 4.

417. Quæ nomen. Besides the etymology given in the text, Carmenta has been supposed by some to be derived qu. carens mente, because the priestess became frantic when inspired by Apollo. Bacchatur vates magnum si pectore possit, Excussisse Deum : tanto magis ille fatigat Os rabidum, fera corda domans, fingitque premendo. Virg. Æneid. vi. 78, 79, 80. Ipsa mone. Diva or Nympha mone. Heins.

418. Erret. Go astray, be lost.

419. Orta prior. Having an origin previous to that of the moon. The name Antelunares, was assumed by the Arcadians, (in like manner as the Athenians called themselves ἀντὶχθονες), in sign of their nation having existed before the moon was in being. Censorinus says that their year contained at first thirteen months, and that they were called Proseleni or Antelunares, because their year had been determined before that of the Greeks, which was arranged according to the course of the moon. See further, Virg. Æneid. viii. 51, and Heyne's note in loc. cit.

420. Arcade. Arcas, who is said to have given name to Arcadia, anciently called Drymodes, from Gr. δρῦς, an oak, was the son of Jupiter and Callisto. Arcadia was in the centre of Peloponnesus, bounded by Achaia, Messenia, Elis and Argolis.

421. Utroque. Some say that Mercury was the father of Evander ; it would appear otherwise from the text.

422. Sacræ. Because of her being a prophetess, or from her having a temple and altar.

423. Ignes. The divine afflatus, or inspiration.

424. Ore dabat, &c. Uttered, with unerring lips, the divinely inspired oracles.

426. Multaque præter. Multam præterito temp. Heins. Tr. She had foretold that troubles and many things beside were impending over her son and herself. Having by long experience (of her truth) gained credit, &c.

427. Fugatus. It is not clearly known what the nature of the circumstance was which obliged Evander to fly his kingdom. Some suppose that he accidentally killed his father. There is no light either thrown by any of the commentators upon Me pulsum patriâ pelagique extrema sequentem. Virg. Æneid. viii. 333.

428. Parrhasiumque larem.—Parrhasia, a town of Arcadia founded by Parrhasius, the son of Jupiter. Larem. Lar is frequently put for a house or dwelling. Apto cum lare fundus, Horat. Od. i. 12, 44. Fast. vi. 95, 306, and Penates also ; Nostris succede Penatibus hospes, Virg. Æneid. viii. 123.

- Cui genetrix flenti, 'Fortuna viriliter,' inquit,
 ' (Siste, puer, lacrymas) ista ferenda tibi est. 430

 ' Cadmus in Aoniâ constitit exul humo. 440

Fast. vi. 483. Properly the Lares and Penates were household gods who presided over families, the former were considered to be of human, the latter of divine origin. The images of the Lares were clad in skins of dogs and placed round the hearth in the atrium, or hall. The Penates were worshipped only in the innermost part of the house called Penetralia.

431. Sic erat in fatis. So Evander, 'Fortuna omnipotens et ineluctabile fatum.' Virg. Æneid, viii. 334.

432. Urbe. Pallanteum; see Virg. Æneid, viii. 51.

433. Non meriti, &c. "You are not enduring the penalty of a misdeed but the anger of a Deity," therefore as Evander had a "mens conscia recti," was not aware of how he had incurred the resentment of any god, he might indulge a hope, spem, and banish his apprehensions, metum; see infr. 435.

434. Est aliquid, &c. It is something, i. e. it is some consolation, when a sense of guilt does not accompany great misfortunes.

435. Conscia mens, &c. So Juvenal, 'se Judice, nemo nocens absolvitur,' Sat. xiii. 2.

437. Nec tamen, &c. Mourn not, however, as if the first that had endured such miseries.

438. Procella. A great tempest, a storm of wind and rain, especially at sea; it is also used for calamities of any kind, here it means the misery of banishment.

439. Tyriis—ab oris. From Phœnecia, a country of Asia, at the east of the Mediterranean, of which Sidon and Tyre were the chief cities. It derives its name either from Phœnix son of Agenor, one of its sovereigns, or from the great number of palm trees, φοινίκες, which grow in the neighbourhood.

440. Cadmus. Son of Agenor king of Phœnecia, by Telephassa or Agriope. He was despatched by his father to search for his sister Europa, who had been carried away by Jupiter, with orders never to return without her. Not having succeeded, he consulted the oracle of Apollo, by which he was directed to build a city where he should see a heifer, whose track he was to follow, lying down in the grass, and to call the country Bœotia; from bove, probably. Ovid. Metam. iii. 1, 2, &c. Aonia—humo. Aonia was one of the ancient names of Bœotia; it was so called in honour of Aon, son of Neptune.

- ' Passus idem Tydeus, et idem Pagasæus Iason ;
 ' Et quos præterea longa referre mora est.

 Utque erat, immissis puppim stetit ante capillis ;
 Continuitque manum torva regentis iter ;
 Et procul in dextram tendens sua brachia ripam, 455

441. Tydeus. Son of Æneus, king of Calydon, and Peribœa. Having accidentally killed one of his friends, or according to some, his own brother Olenius, he fled for refuge to the court of Adrastus, king of Argos, whose daughter Deiphyle he married.

— Pagasæus. This epithet was applied to all the Argonauts. Pagasæ, was a dock or arsenal of Phæræ in Thessaly, in which the Argo, Pagasæa ratis, is said to have been built. According to Strabo it derived its name from its springs, πάγαι. Jason. Son of Æson king of Iolchos and Alcimedæ; for his numerous adventures see Class. Dic. To the above list may be added, Tencer, Horat. Od. i. 21.

443. Omne solum, &c.

' The hero deems, how wide soe'er he roam,
 All soils alike his country and his home.'
Anon.

445. Nec fera, &c. So Horace, ' Non semper imbres nubibus hispidos Manant in agros, nec mare Caspium vexant inæquales procellæ Usque,' &c.

447. Firmata. Et firma, Francos.

448. Hesperiam. From Hesper or Vesper; the evening star, or the evening, from Gr. ἑως ὥρας, because it comes at the close of day. Italy was called Hesperia from its lying in the direction of the west or sunset. Evander arrived in Italy, during the reign of Faunus, sixty years before Æneas landed there according to Dionysius Halicarn.

449. Amnem. The Tiber, see supr. 233.

450. Egerat. Vexerat, Al. Reaerat. Heins. Obviis. Against the current.

451. Illa. Carmenta. Terenti. Terentus was the name of a place at the end of the Campus Martius, not far from the Capitol; where stood a temple of Pluto and Consus, (a deity who presided over councils, in whose honour the Consualia were celebrated. Liv. i. c. 9.) with an altar under ground consecrated to the Inferi. It was so called, a terendo, from the Tiber eating away and making a breach in its banks. Hence the Ludi Terentini or Seculares.

453. Utque erat. And as she was, sc. immissis capillis, with hair dishevelled, she took her stand

458. Vix est Evand. vixq. retent. man. Vir, Evandre, tua vixq. r. m. est. Heins.

459. Dique. This address to the deities of the country was usual on occasions similar to that in the text. So Æneas, on his arrival at the same place. “Salve fatis mihi debita Tellus, Vosque, ait, O fidi Trojæ salvete Penates.”—“Geniumque loci, primamque deorum Tellurem, Nymphasque, et adhuc ignota precatur Flumina,” &c. Virg. Æneid. vii. 120, 136.

460. Novos—Deos. Romulus ; the Cæsars, &c.

461. Flumina. Rivers and fountains which this friendly land enjoys.

462. Naiadumque chori. The Naiads were inferior deities who presided over rivers, springs, wells and fountains ; from Gr. ναῖιδ, to flow. They are generally represented as youthful and beautiful virgins, naked to the waist, and leaning upon a vase from which appears to flow a stream of water. They were held in great veneration among the ancients. Sacrifices of goats and lambs were offered to them with libations of wine, honey, and oil, and occasionally milk, fruits, and flowers only.

463. Bonis avibus. With good auspices. See supr. x. 180.

464. Ripaque. And let that bank be pressed with lucky foot.

465. Colles. The seven hills (colles, montes, arces, or juga), upon which Rome was built. Palatinus, Capitolinus, Aventinus, Cælius, Esquilinus, Viminalis, Quirinalis. Hence called Urbs Septicollis, or Septemgemina. Stat. Sylv. i. 2. 191. iv. 1. 6. by the Greeks ἑπτὰ κόλλες, Serv. in Æneid, vi. 784. Georg. ii. 535. 470. Hic quoque. His quoque. Heins. Here also (as Helen was before,) a woman shall be the cause of a new war. Fœmina. Lavinia the daughter of Latinus, king of the Aborigines in Italy, and Amata; on her account the war broke out between Turnus and Æneas. See Virg. Æneid. vii. 51. 268. &c.

471. Palla. Pallas was the son of Evander. He accompanied the auxiliaries with which his father had supplied Æneas against Turnus, by whom, after a brief but glorious career, he was slain. Virg. Æneid. x. 486—hence funesta arma.

472. Non humili vindice. Because his death was revenged by Æneas who slew Turnus on his account “Tunc hinc spoliis indute meorum Eripiare mihi? Pallas te hoc vulnere, Pallas Immolat, et pœnam scelerato ex sanguine sumit.” Æneid. xii. 948-9.

473. Victa tamen. Alluding to the subsequent subjection of the Grecian to the Roman powers, when Greece became a dependent province and was governed by a proconsul.

475. Pergama. (plur. n.) Pergamus. (sing. f.) The citadel of Troy. It is often used for Troy itself. It was situated in the most elevated part of the town, on the shores of the river Scamander; now called Pergamo. Neptunia. So called because Neptune and Apollo when banished from heaven by Jupiter, were obliged to assist Laomedon in building the walls of Troy. See Class. Dic. Urite vict.—flamm. Ironical.

476. Num minus. Nunc minor, Francos. Num minor, Ursin. Nec minus, Zulich. The sense of the passage as it stands in the text is, whether, in consequence of the destruction of Troy by fire, are these embers, num hic cinis, sc. Rome, the less on that account, eo minus, superior, or likely to prove so, in dominion, to the whole world? toto est altior orbe.

477. Sacra, &c. The fire of Vesta; the images of the gods, &c. “Tu, genitor, cape sacra manu patrisque Penates.” Æneid. ii. 717. Sacra altera patrem. The word sacra may be used here either in reference to the venerable character of Æneas’ burden, patrem, or to the divine honours which were paid to Anchises after his decease.

478. Vesta. For Templum Vestæ. She was the goddess of fire. Two of this name are mentioned by the poets, one the mother and the other the daughter of Saturn, who are frequently confounded; but the latter chiefly was worshipped at Rome. In her sanctuary was supposed to be preserved the Palladium of Troy, (fatale pignus imperii Romani, Liv. xxxvi. 27), and a fire, kept constantly burning, by a number of virgins called the Vestal Virgins, brought by Æneas from Troy, supr. 477. Virg. Æneid, ii. 297, hence, "Hic locus est Vestæ, qui Pallada servas et ignem." Ovid. Trist. i. 39, near which was the palace of Numa, ibid. 40. Horat. Od. i. 2. 16. Vesta, the goddess of Fire, is so called from Gr. ἱστία, focus; Vesta, the goddess of the Earth, from Gr. ἱστέριον, stabilire, see Fast. vi. 277. The temple of the former was consecrated at Rome by Numa.

479. Tempus erit, &c. The time shall arrive when the same individual shall protect you and the world, and sacrifices shall be offered, a very Deity assisting in their celebration. Idem, in the text, refers to Julius Cæsar, likewise ipso Deo. Colente, refers to his being Pontif. Max.

481. Augustos. Augustus Cæsar and his posterity.

482. Fas. It is the will of the gods.

483. Inde nepos natusque. Inde satusque neposq : Cod. Neapol. By some commentators this is applied to Tiberius, the adopted son of Augustus, and consequently grandson of Julius Cæsar; it is further well known that he appeared at first reluctant to assume the reins of government upon the death of Augustus, being desirous to induce the Romans to believe that he was invested with the purple not from his own choice, but by the recommendation of the late emperor, and the urgent entreaties of the senate; and to this allusion may be made in licet ipse recuset. Others refer the line to Germanicus, whose father and grandfather are mentioned, supr. l. 10, in a manner which might bear out the application of the text as above, nepos natusque DEI; he also was saluted as Emperor by the soldiers whom he was commanding in Germany at the time Augustus died; but he refused this honour, and had some difficulty in appeasing a tumult which ensued in consequence. It is right to give the opinions on both sides as they are supported by high authorities, but the former would appear to be borne out by l. 484, which is prophetic of the sceptre being actually swayed, as it was by Tiberius, whereas Germanicus was secretly poisoned at Daphne near Antioch, in the midst of his successes in the east, in the 34th year of his age, by the direction, as is supposed, of the Emperor Tiberius.

484. Pondera. The weight of government. Cælesti mente. With divine wisdom. Paterna. Inherited from his father.

485. Utque ego, &c. And as I shall in time be worshipped at immortal altars, &c.

486. Augusta, Livia Drusilla; daughter of L. Drusus Calidianus, and wife of Tiberius Claudius

Ecce boves illuc Erythēidas applicat Heros,

Nero by whom she had Tiberius, afterwards Emperor, and Drusus Germanicus. Her husband was a partisan of Mark Antony, and was involved in the ill success of his cause. Livia, preparing to escape the threatening danger, was seen by Augustus, who became enamoured of her, and married her, though she was then pregnant, having, with the approval of the augurs, divorced his former wife Scribonia. Livia is accused of having destroyed all the connections and relatives of Augustus to secure the succession of her son Tiberius, and finally of having murdered her husband to hasten it. She received the name Julia in consequence of her connection with the Julian family, by her marriage with Augustus. What the poet, in the excess of his servile adulation, ventures to predict as to her becoming, novum numen, is stated by Suetonius and Dio, to have actually occurred, but long subsequent to the death of Ovid, divine honours having been decreed to her by her grandson Claudius, l. (Tiber. Drusus Nero,) who became emperor on the death of Caligula.

487. Talibus ut dictis nost. desc. in ann. Talibus auspiciis nostros descendit ad agros. Ursin. Zulich. Maz. Nauger. Voss. and others. But the reading in the text is decidedly preferable, for the prophetic, beginning with Æneas, came down, descendit, to the times of Augustus and Tiberius, nostros—

in annos. Dictis, is used for Vaticiniis, Prophecies.

488. Substitit. Her prophetic tongue ceased in the midst of her discourse.

489. Exul. Evander.

490. Cui locus ille. The poet may be supposed to have uttered this with no ordinary feeling ; however his flattery and his regrets were alike ineffectual with Augustus and his successor. He died in exile, in Tomi on the Euxine sea.

491. Nova tecta. These ‘new abodes’ were called Pallantem, after the city they had left. Nec alter. None other was greater than the Arcadian, sc. Evander, in the Ausonian hills.

493. Erythēidas. So called from Erythea, or Erythia, an island either adjoining, or forming part of Gades, of which no trace is to be discovered now according to its description by ancient authors. It was said to be the habitation of Geryon, a celebrated monster, born, as were also Echidna and the Chimæra, from the union of Chrysaor, son of Medusa by Neptune, with Callirrhœ, one of the Oceanides. He is represented by the poets as having three bodies and three heads ; ‘Tergemini nece Geryonæ,’ &c. Æneid, viii. 202 ; he possessed numerous flocks which were guarded by a two-headed dog, Orthos, and Eurythion. One of the labours imposed upon Hercules by Eurystheus was to destroy Geryon ; Or-thos and Eurythion, which he effected and carried away the flocks and herds to Tirynthus. Virg. Æneid. vii. 661. viii. 202. Applicat. Appulit. Heins.

494. Claviger. Hercules, son of Jupiter and Alcmena, whose insignia were a club and the skin of the Nemæan lion. See Class. Dic.

495. Tegæa. 'While a Tegæan house was his abode,' i. e. the house of Evander. 'Ad tecta subibant Pauperis Evandri—Hæc, inquit, limina victor Alcides subiit ; hæc illum regia cepit.' Virg. Æneid. viii. 359, 362–3. Tegæa was a town of Arcadia, situate to the north east of Megalopolis, between that and Argos, and not far from the Eurotas.

497. Tirynthius. Hercules was so called, having been reared at Tyrins or Tyrinthus, (according to Diodorus, at Thebes,) a maritime town of Argolis, in Peloponnesus. It was anciently called Halieis, from Gr. ἁλιεύς, because inhabited by fishermen.

500. Aversos. Backwards. Compare Virg. Æneid. viii. 205, et seq. Propert. iv. El. 9, Liv. i. 7. Cacus. From Gr. κακός, malus. A celebrated robber, who resided in Italy, son of Vulcan and Me-dusa. According to some authors he was one of Evander's servants, and, if so, stood, it may be presumed, in the same relation to his master as Caliban did to Prospero.

501. Aventinæ, &c. The dread and disgrace of the Aventine wood, in consequence of his robberies and murders. See line 507. The Mons Aventinus was the most extensive of the seven hills, Dionys. iv. 26 ; it was called after an Alban king of that name, who was buried on it, Liv. i. 3. It was called also, Murcius, from Murcia, the goddess of sleep, who had a small temple, sacellum, on it, Festus ; Collis Dianæ, from a temple of Diana, Stat. Silv. ii. 3, 32 ; and Remonius from Remus, who wished the city to be founded there.

503. Dira viro, &c. The visage of the man was horrible ; his strength proportioned to his bulk ; his bulk immense. Dira. Dura, Al. Mira, Voss.

504. Mulciber. Mulcifer. Al. Vulcan, so called, a mulcendo ferrum, the god of fire, (Ignipotens, Virg. Æn. x. 243) and of smiths ; the son of Jupiter and Juno, (or according to some, of Juno alone, who wished to imitate Jupiter, from whose brains Minerva sprung), and the husband of Venus. See Class. Dic.

509. Male. Scarcely.

510. Furta. The stolen oxen.

511. Accipio revocamen. I hear the recall.

513. Ille aditum, &c. He had blocked up the entrance with a barrier of broken crag ; scarcely could twice five team have moved the mass.

515. Cælum quoque. Hercules is said to have relieved Atlas for a while, and taken the heavens on his own shoulders. This fable is supposed to have originated in Hercules having restored to Atlas his daughters, who had been carried away by Busiris king of Egypt, and having in consequence received, as a reward, the knowledge of astronomy and a celestial globe. The use and advantages of which having communicated to the Greeks, he was said thence to have borne the heavens himself.

517. Quod simul avulsum. Quo simul avulso. Heins. omitting est.

518. Ictaque, &c. The smitten earth sunk down, gave way, beneath the weight of the mass.

519. Collata—dextra. i. e. cominus, Hand to hand.

520. Remque ferox. Remque ferus, Hugen. Excerpt. Feram, Arund. Stipitibus. Trunks of trees. Stipes, from Gr. στέψος, id. Gerit. Movet, Excerpt. Kloek.

521. Male fortis. With little courage, less bold. Ad artes—patrias. To his father's craft, sc. fire.

523. Typhoëa. A celebrated giant, called also Typhon, son of Tartarus and Terra. He had a hundred heads like those of dragons, and flames of fire darted continually from his mouth and eyes. The moment he was born he made war upon the gods, to avenge the death of his brothers, and scared them so that they fled in different shapes ; Jupiter became a ram ; Juno, a cow ; Apollo, a crow, &c. At last Jupiter took courage ; overcame Typhœus with his thunderbolts, and crushed him under Mount Ætna in Sicily, or according to some under the island Inarime ; '— durumque cubile Inarime Jovis imperiis imposita Typhæo.' Virg. Æneid, ix. 715-16.

525. Alcides. Hercules, so called either from Gr. ἀλκῆ, robur, or Alcæus, his paternal grandsire. Adductaque, &c. And his triple knotted club, wielded, (or swung, lit. drawn back, to let the blow be more violent from the greater fall of the weapon), descended thrice and four times upon the face of his adversary.

529. Ex illis. Of those that had been stolen.

531. Constituitque sibi. According to Dionysius and Livy, this altar was built in honour of Hercules by Evander, pursuant to the directions of his mother Carmenta. Quæ Maxima dicitur. 'Quæ Maxima semper Dicetur nobis, et erit quæ maxima semper.' Virg. Æneid, viii. 271-2. The priests who ministered at this altar were the Petittii and Pinarii, instituted by Evander, and at that time two of the most illustrious families in that place. Liv. i. 7. Æneid, viii. 270.

532. Pars Urbis. The Forum Boarium, which is by some supposed to derive its name a bove, from the sacrifice offered by Hercules ; by others, from a brazen statue of a bull that was erected there. Tacit. xii. 24.

533. Nec tacet, &c. Nor is Evander's mother silent on the subject of the time being near at hand, when earth should have enjoyed its favorite Hercules enough. Suo, is used emphatically here as a term of endearment.

535. Dis gratissima vixit. Gratissim. dixit. Burmann. as in Metam. xiv. 123. 'Dis gratissima, dixit.'

536. Hunc diem. The third of the Ides, on which the Carmentalia were celebrated.

537. Idibus. On the Ides, the thirteenth of January.

538. Seminaris—ovis. Of a wether sheep. Semimas—aris, c. g. Flammis libat. Sacrifices at the altar.

539. Redditaque, &c. Upon the Ides of January, A. U. 726, A. C. 27, Augustus, having by every possible courtesy, during the preceding year, thoroughly ingratiated himself with the Roman people and secured their affections, proposed in a set speech, to resign his authority into the hands of the senate and people. As might be expected, the feint succeeded, and he was prevailed upon by the voice of the nation to continue at its head. The confidence which he had thus obtained, enabled him to make such a distribution of the provinces, that he gave up those that were completely tranquil to the people, to be governed by proconsuls, but those in which any symptoms of probable disturbance appeared, he retained for himself, by which means he may be said to have disarmed the senate, and made himself sole master of the military power of the state and its preponderating influence.

540. Tuus. Addressing Germanicus. See supr. l. 10. Augusto. According to the poet, Octavius Caesar was publicly called by this name on the Ides of January. Censorinus mentions the sixteenth of the kalends of February as the day on which this occurred, and Orosius, the eighth of the Ides.

541. Ceras. Images of wax. Those whose ancestors or themselves had been distinguished for any curule magistracy, that is, had filled the office of Consul, Prætor, Censor, or Curule Ædile, were called 'Nobiles,' and had the privilege of making images of themselves, jus imaginum, which were kept with great care by their posterity, and carried before them at funerals. Plin. xxxv. 2.

These images were merely busts or effigies of persons as far as the shoulders, made of wax and painted ; which were generally placed in the courts, atria, of their houses, enclosed in wooden cases, and only brought out on solemn occasions. Polyb. vi. 51. There were titles and inscriptions written below them, describing the honours they had enjoyed, and achievements they had performed. Juvenal. Sat. viii. 6. Plin. xxxv. 2. Hence Imagines frequently stands for Nobilitas, Sallust, Jug. 85. Liv. iii. 58, and Cera for Imagines, as above, Ovid. Amor. i. 8. 65. Anciently this right of possessing images was peculiar to the Patricians ; but afterwards the Plebeians also acquired it when admitted to curule offices.

543. Africa victorem. It was usual among the Romans to confer an additional name, Agnomen, or Cognomen, upon an individual in consequence of some illustrious action or remarkable event. Thus the name Africanus was bestowed both upon P. Cornelius Scipio, and P. Æmilianus Scipio, (son of L. Æmilius Paulus, and adopted by the son of the great Scipio,) in consequence of their distinguished success in Africa in the second and third Punic wars. Isauras. P. Servilius, who was proconsul of Asia during the age of Mithridates, overcame the Isauri, a people of Asia at Mount Taurus; he was honoured with a triumph in consequence, and received the name Isauricus.

544. Aut Cretum. Q. Metellus was surnamed Creticus, from his conquests in Crete. Cretum, for Cretorum.

545. Numidæ. A people of Africa, under the dominion of Jugurtha; in consequence of his eminent success against them during the Jugurthan war, Cæcilius Metellus was called Numidicus. Messana. Or Messala, a town in Sicily, conquered by Valerius Corvinus Max. who assumed its name.

546. Numantina. Numantia was a town of Spain near the sources of the river Durius, now the Douro; it was destroyed after a war of fourteen years, which, although unprotected by any fortifications, it maintained with extraordinary courage against the Romans, by Scipio Æmilianus, thence called Numantinus.

547. Mortem et nomen. Death and glory. Druso. Drusus was the brother of Tiberius and father of Germanicus, to whom the 'Fasti' are dedicated, l. 3. While engaged with the Germans between the river Sala and the Rhine, he was killed by a fall from his horse. He had been a distinguished general and signalized himself in Gaul, as in Germany, against the Rhæti and Vindelici, for which he was honoured with a triumph. He is called Germanicus, in history, a name which also distinguishes his family.

548. Quam brevis. Drusus was killed in the thirtieth year of his age. It would appear that Ovid is justified in this expression of his sorrow from V. Paterculus, who confers a noble panegyric upon the courage and accomplishments of Drusus.

549. Si petat a victis, &c. If Cæsar were to seek among the vanquished, he should assume as many names as the vast world could reckon nations.

551. Ex uno quidam, &c. Some derive distinguished titles, on account of a collar won, Torquis ademptæ, or an assisting crow, Corvi auxiliaris, from one, ex uno, adversary, or exploit. Manlius was called Torquatus, from his having vanquished a Gaul in single combat, and stripped him of his collar. When the Roman army was challenged by one of the Senones, remarkable for his strength and stature, Valerius, a military tribune under Camillus, undertook to meet him and obtained an easy victory by the aid of a crow which attacked his antagonist in the face with its beak and claws, whence Valerius received the surname Corvinus.

553. Magne. Pompey was called Magnus, from the splendour and success of his warlike enterprises. He was the son of Pompeius Strabo, a distinguished general in the Italic war, under whom he served while a boy, and was early instructed in the military art ; see Introduction to the Oration on the Manil. Law, sec 11. in M'Kay's excellent edition of the Select Orations of Cicero.

554. Qui te vicit. Julius Cæsar, who overcame Pompey on the plains of Pharsalia. 'Non jam Pompeii nomen populare per orbem, Nec studium belli : sed par, quod semper habemus, Libertas et Cæsar erunt.' Lucan. Pharsal. vii.

555. Fabios. Q. Fabius Maximus Rutilianus, the first of the Fabii who obtained the surname of Maximus, for lessening the power of the populace at elections. This he effected, A. U. 449, by separating the meaner class from all the tribes through which they had been dispersed by App. Claudius, and including them in the four city tribes ; 'Ne humillimorum in manu comitia essent, omnem forensem turbam excretam in quatuor tribus conjecit, urbanasque eos appellavit, &c. Liv. ix. 46. Among these were ranked all whose fortunes were below a certain valuation, called Proletarii, and those who had no fortune whatever, Capite Censi. Gell. xvi. 10. From that time, and perhaps previously, the four city tribes were esteemed less honorable than the thirty-one rustic tribes.

558. Nomen. Numen. AL 'Hoc tu per terras, quod in æthere Jupiter alto, Nomen habes ; hominum tu Pater, ille Deum.' Fast. ii. 131.

559. Sancta. The hallowed rites.

563. Ducis. Augustus.

564. Querna Corona. This was the Corona Civica, made of oak leaves, e Fronde querna, hence called Quercus civilis, Virg. Æneid. vi. 772. It was the highest reward which could be conferred ; whoever saved the life of a citizen was presented with it by the person whom he had preserved, and was ever after regarded as a parent. This was one of the many honours decreed by the senate to Augustus, that a civic crown should be suspended from the top of his house, between two laurel branches, which were set up in the vestibule before the gate, symbolical of his being the constant preserver of his citizens, and the conqueror of his enemies, Dio. liii. 16. Hence in some of the coins of Augustus there is a civic crown, with this inscription, ob cives servatos. Ovid doubtless alluded to this, 'Adjice servatis unum Pater Op-tune civem, Qui procul extremo solus in orbe jacet.' Trist. iii. 1. 38—50.

565. Auspiciousque Deis. The gods being propitious. Hæres. Tiberius.

566. Omine. With the same auspices as his father. Suscipiat. Some allusion may be intended by this term to the apparent hesitation of Tiberius in accepting the supreme power. See N. 483.

567. Assiste precanti. Stand by the priest. So Horace, 'Assisto divinis.' Sat. 6, 114.

569. Porrima—Postvertaque. According to some, the sisters, to others, the companions of Carmenta in her flight from Arcadia ; therefore they had a share in the sacrifices offered to her. Porrima was so called from her knowledge of events long past, porro, Gr. πρόσω ; Postverta, from her knowledge of futurity, quod postea venturum, or versurum, Gr. ὀπίσω. Placantur. Placatur. Al.

570. Maenali. Carmenta, so called from Maenalus, a mountain in Arcadia.

573. Te niveo posuit templo, &c. The succeeding day, lux proxima, xvii. Kal. February, shined you, fair Concord, in a marble temple, where the majestic Moneta, i. e. the noble temple of Juno Moneta, rears its lofty steps. The temple of Juno in the Capitol stood near the house of M. Manlius Capitolinus ; it had a hundred marble steps. The temple of Concord was erected close to that of Juno. Fert. Sublim. grad. An hypallage for Ferunt sub. grad.

575. Nunc. Now that your reign has been restored, and your temple repaired, sc. by Tiberius and Livia. Bene prospicies. You shall look with kindness on the Latin people.

576. Socratæ manus. Hallowed hands, i. e. of the priests.

577. Furius. M. Fur. Camillus who conquered the Veientes, a people of Etruria. Antiquum. i. e. Olim. Formerly. Et voti, &c. And had of old redeemed his plighted vow.

579. Sumptis secesserat armis.

The people demanded that one of the consuls should be chosen out of their own body, both consuls having been up to that time Patricians. After considerable dissension, the commons prevailed, and L. Sextus was made consul on the part of the people, L. Æmilius Mamercus, of the Patricians, A. U. 328. 'Annus hic erat insignis novi hominis consulatu,' &c. Liv. vii. Livy makes no mention of the temple of Concord at this period, but he writes that games were instituted, &c. on account of the restoration of harmony among all ranks.

580. Ipsa suos Roma timebat opes. So Livy, in præf. 'Eò creverit ut jam magnitudine laboret sua,' and Sallust, 'Qui labores, pericula, dubias atque asperas res facile toleraverant, iis otium divitiæ optandæ aliis, oneri miseriæque,' &c.

Perhaps allusion may be made here to the laws which were then promulgated by the Tribunes of the people against the property of the Patricians and in favour of the commons. One of them, in regard to debt, was, that the interest already paid by any debtor should be allowed as part payment of the principal, and that three years should be allowed for discharging the balance. Another was to prevent any individual becoming the proprietor of more than fifty acres of land; and a third, that Comitia should not be held for the election of military tribunes, and that one of the consuls should be chosen from the people.

581. Passos Germania crines. Germany lays at your feet her dishevelled hair. It was customary to shave the head of captives, to which Ovid alludes here. So also Propertius 'Africam tonsam,' for 'victam' and Ovid. Amor. i. 13, 'Jam tibi captivos mittet Germania crines.' Tiberius and Germanicus overran both Germany and Pannonia, and a triumph was decreed them which did not, however, take place until two years after, in consequence of the deep affliction which the city suffered at the total destruction of the Roman army under Quintilius Varus, by Arminius, a German chief. Their bodies were found six years after by Germanicus on the field of battle and buried with great pomp.

583. Inde triumphatæ, &c.—Thence you have offered up the treasures of a vanquished nation.

584. Templaque fecisti. 'Dedicavit et Concordiæ ædem, item Pollucis et Castoris suo fratrisque nomine de manubiis.' Sueton. in Tiber. Quam colis ipse. Quæ colis ipsa, sc. Germania. Heins.

585. Hæc. sc. Templa. Constituit—et rebus. Established with all things necessary for the due performance of the sacred rites. Ara. With an altar; Livia Drusilla erected one in the temple of Concord.

586. Magni—Jovis. Augustus, who is put on a level here with Jupiter. Sola—digna reperta. The poet indulges still farther this vein of extravagant compliment in his Tristia. ii. Eleg. i.

587. Hæc. sc. Festa. Capricorno. See ii. 238. On the sixteenth of the kalends of Feb. the sun leaves Capricorn and enters the sign of Aquarius, juvenis-gerentis aquam; whence Aquarius is sometimes called by the poets 'Urniger.' See Fast. ii. 145.

589. Septimus hinc. On the tenth of the kalends of February Lyra sets heliacally.

591. Sidere ab hoc. After the setting of this constellation, sc. Lyra, on the ninth, Kal. Feb. at the approach of night, the star which is in the centre of the breast of Leo shall set cosmically.

593. Evolvi. I read over. So Horace, Tempora si fastosque velisevolvere mundi. Sat. i. 3. 112.

594. Sementiva. The Feriæ Sementivæ consisted in a festival, or holidays, to be observed at seed-time in order to ensure a good crop. Nec—ulla reperta dies. The Feriæ Sement. belonged to that class of holidays called Conceptivæ, which were annually appointed, (Concipiebantur vel indiciebantur), for a certain day, which, however, was changeable, by the priests or magistrates; Nec ulla, &c. which should have been otherwise had they come under the head of the Stativæ which were recorded in the Fasti and celebrated on fixed and stated, statis, days, in the appointed months.

595. Sensit enim. For she perceived the difficulty. Indicitur. Is appointed; sooner or later, being regulated by the season, the sowing of the seed, and also the will of the magistrates or priests.

597. Utque, &c. Expl. As the precise day, dies, for the observance of the customary rites is uncertain, so the time is sure, sc. when the ground is pregnant with the scattered seed.

599. Coronati. The oxen on such occasions were allowed to repose from their daily toil ; were indulged with a full crib, plenum præsepe, and had their horns decorated with garlands of flowers. 'Luce sacrâ requiescat, humus, requiescat arator ; Et grave suspenso vomere cesset opus. Solvite vincla jugis ; nunc ad præsepia debent Plena coronato stare boves capite.' Tibull. ii. Eleg. 1.

601. Emeritum. Having served out its time. A metaphor from soldiers who were said to be emeritis stipendiis, when the period of military service had expired. Palo. A peg. qu. pagulus, from Gr. πῆγω, to fix.

605. Pagus agat festum. This was the Paganalia, (which also belonged to the Feriae Concept.) celebrated in the villages, in pagis, to the tutelary gods of the rustic tribes. This festival was instituted by Servius Tullius, who also ordained that at the time of its celebration, the peasants should each pay a piece of money into the hands of the individual who presided at the sacrifices ; the men a piece of one kind, the women of another, and the children of a third sort, Dionys. iv. 51. Lustrate. This purification may have been effected by burning heaps of straw as at the Palilia, or by compassing the village in solemn procession.

606. Et date. Present the yearly cakes upon the village altars. Every village had its own peculiar altar by direction of Servius Tullius. Annua lib. fac. Ann. ferta vel fercta. Burmann.

610. Hæc. Ceres. Illa. Terra.

611. Consortes operum. Partners in the toil by which antiquity was reformed, (Fast. iv. 375.) and the mast of the oak was overcome by the more wholesome food. Ceres first taught mankind the growth and use of corn, before which they used to live upon the produce of the beech and oak, &c. 'Cum prorepserunt primis animalia terris, Mutum et turpe pecus, glandem atque cubilia propter, Unguib, dein fustibus, atque ita porro Pugnabant armis.' Horat. Sat. i. 99.

616. Usta. Withered. Uro is used to express the effect of cold as well as heat. 'Boreæ penetrabile frigus adurat.' Virg. Georg. and Fasti. iv. 884; and not merely by the poets but by the philosophers also. Pliny applies aduror to cold: "Aduri quoque fervore aut flatu frigidiorē," and again "adusta nivibus."

617. Calum—aperite. Clear by the winds the surface of the sky. So Homer—'ὑπερβαλὼν ἀσπίτος αἰθέρος.' viii. 558.

618. Ætherea aqua. With rain.

619. Graves cultis. Injurious to the crops. Cerealia dona. The seed of the corn.

621. Subjectis. Sown. Formicæ. Ants. from Greek μύρμηξ Æol. and Dor. βύρμαξ, or a ferendis micis.

623. Scabræ rubiginis experts. Safe from the filthy mildew, or blight. The blight, rubigo, is a disease to which corn is very subject. This is called by Theophrastus ἐρυσίβη. It is generally supposed to signify the smut, which is a putrefaction of the ear, and turns it into a black slime. Virgil makes it a disease of the stalk, 'ut mala culmos Esset rubigo.' Georg. i. 151.

624. Nec vitio, &c. Nor let the sickly-crop be smutted by the inclemency of the weather.

625. Neque pinguior æquo. An excessive luxuriance of the corn was equally to be deprecated. Theophrastus mentions that in a rich soil the husbandmen mowed the young corn, and fed it down to keep it from running too much to leaf; and Virgil, 'Quid, qui, ne gravidis procumbat culmus aristis, Luxuriam segetum tenera depascit in herba.' Georg. i. 112.

627. Loliis. Lolium, (a λαῖον ὄλεον, i. e. segetem perdere, vel λαῖον ὄλεον, i. e. seges noxia.) Darnel or tares, a weed common in corn fields. Oculos vitiantibus. When ground and baked, undesignedly, with the flour, it caused giddiness in the head.

628. Avena. The 'Ægilops' of Pliny; wild oats; they are not as some think a degenerate species of the common oats, but of a sort totally distinct; the chaff of them is hairy, and the seed small like that of grass. 'Infelix Lolium, et steriles dominantur avenæ.' Virg. Georg. i. 154.

- Triticeos fœtus, passuraque farra bis ignem,
 Hordeaque ingenti fœnore reddat ager. 630
 Hæc ego pro vobis, hæc vos optate, coloni;
 Efficiantque ratas utraque Diva preces.

 Vomere; cedebat taurus arator equo.

 Sub juga bos veniat, sub terras semen aratas:

 At quæ venturas præcedet sexta kalendas,
 Hæc sunt Ledaïs templa dicata Deis.
 Fratribus illa Deis fratres de gente Deorum
 Circa Juturnæ composuere lacus.

629. Triticcos fœtus. The wheaten crops. Triticum, quod tritum est ex spicis. Varr. The triticum of the ancients was not our common wheat, but a bearded sort, hence arista is frequently used by the poets for wheat. Mr. Martyn mentions, in proof of the triticum being bearded, that all the statues and medals of Ceres which he had seen, had no other species represented on them. Bis. Because the corn was first dried by roasting, and then put into the oven, when ground, for bread. Farra. The ζεια or ζίζα of the Greeks.

630. Hordeaq. Barley. Ovid has here incurred the censure which Virgil received from the notable critics, Bavius and Mævius, for using hordea in the plural number; 'Hordea qui dixit superest ut tritica dicat.' Ingenti fœnore. In great abundance.

632. Utraque Diva. Ceres and Terra.

634. Vomere. So the prophet Joel, "Beat your ploughshares into swords and your pruning hooks into spears." Cedebat

taurus—'Non ullas aratro Dignus honos.' Georg. i. 506.

635. Sarcula. Hoes or rakes. Pila. The pilum, a weapon in use among the ancient Romans, was a javelin or pike, five feet and a half long, having a three square head of iron or steel, nine inches in length. Ligones. Spades.

636. Cassis. The Tuscan term for a helmet.

640. Pax Cererem nutrit. For 'Squalent abductis arva colonis.' Georg. i. 507. Alumna. The foster child; from alere.

641. At quæ. The sixth of the kalends of February, with us Jan. 27th, was remarkable for the dedication of a temple to Castor and Pollux, the son of Jupiter and Leda.

642. Ledaïs. Ledaicis. Heins.

643. Fratribus. Castor and Pollux. Illā. sc. Temples. Fratres. Drusus and Tiberius.

644. Juturnæ. A fountain near the river Numicus and the Mons Albanus in Latium; called after Juturna the sister of Turnus; see supr. 413. Its waters were used

TERT. KAL. FEB. ARA PACI POSITA.

IPSUM nos carmen deduci† Pacis ad aram :	645
Hæc erit à mensis fine secunda dies.
Frondebis Actiacis comtos redimita capillos,
Pax ades ; et toto mitis in orbe mane.
Dum desint hostes, desit quoque causa triumphī :

Ad pia propensos vota rogate Deos.
Sed jam prima mei pars est exacta laboris ;
Cumque suo finem mense libellus habet.	660

in sacrifices, particularly those of Vesta ; they were also said to have the power of healing diseases.

645. Ipsum Carmen. i. e. Carminis ratio ; the plan of the Fasti Pacis ad aram. The site of this altar is unknown. Claudius commenced a splendid temple consecrated to Peace, at Rome, which was finished by Vespasian.

646. A mensis fine, &c. On the third of the kalends of Feb. with us Jan. 30th, the Pacalia, the festival in honour of Peace, was held.

647. Actiacis. In reference to the celebrated naval victory, which Augustus obtained over Antony and Cleopatra, at Actium, now Azio, a town and promontory of Epirus, B. C. 31. Soon after which he closed the temple of Janus, in sign of peace.

651. Quibus arma coerceat. Quæ bella coerc. Excerpt. Kloeck. To restrain hostile invasion.

652. Nil nisi pompa. Let nothing but the solemn processions, accompanying the games and festivals, be proclaimed by the fierce trumpet.

653. Æneadas. The Romans ; descended from Æneas and the Trojans. Et primus et ultimus orbis. The eastern and western worlds.

655. Pacalibus flammis. The fires lighted upon the altar of Peace.

656. Albaque. The victims offered in sacrifice to the celestial gods were white, as were also the robes of the officiating priest.

657. Utque domus, &c. Implore the gods, who lean to pious prayers, that the house, whose boon it is, may with peace abide for ever.

LIBER II.

JANUS habet finem; cum carmine crescit et annus :
 Alter ut it mensis, sic liber alter eat.
 Nunc primum velis, elegi, majoribus itis :
 Exiguum, memini, nuper eratis opus.
 Certe ego vos habui faciles in amore ministros, 5
 Cum lusit numeris prima juvenia suis.
 Idem sacra cano, signataque tempora Fastis :
 Equis ad hæc illinc crederet esse viam ?
 Hæc mea militia est ; ferimus, quæ possumus, arma :
 Dextraque non omni munere nostra vacat. 10
 Si mihi non valido torquentur pila lacerto,
 Nec bellatoris terga premuntur equi ;
 Nec galeâ tegimur, nec acuto cingimur ense :
 (His habilis telis quilibet esse potest :)
 At tua prosequimur studioso pectore, Cæsar, 15
 Nomina ; per titulos ingredimurque tuos.
 Ergo ades, et placido paulum mea munera vultu
 Respice ; pacando siquid ab hoste vacas.

1. Janus. The month dedicated to Janus, January.

3. Velis. See i. l. 4. Elegi. From the Greek ἐλέγῳ, a phrase peculiar to the expression of sorrow ; here elegi means merely elegiac verses, hexameter and pentameter. Itis. Ite. Mazar. as in Pont. ‘Ite leves elegi,’ &c.

4. Exiguum. As much as to say that the works he had previously written were but trifling, when compared with the present.

in which he embarked velis majoribus.

8. Ad hæc. i. e. To treating of sacred subjects. Illinc. From the object of his earlier study, sc. the Ars Amatoria, Amores, &c.

9. Militia. Employment, service.

10. Dextraque. My right hand is not destitute of every skill.

14. His habilis. Any may be conversant with such arms as these.

FEBRUARIUS.

FEBRUA Romani dixêre piamina Patres :
 Nunc quoque dant verbo plurima signa fidem. 20
 Pontifices ab Rege petunt et Flamine lanas, Quêis veteri linguâ Februa nomen erat.
 Quæque capit lictor domibus purgamina tersis,
 Torrida cum micâ farra, vocantur idem.
 Nomen idem ramo, qui cæsus ab arbore purâ, 25
 Casta sacerdotum tempora fronde tegit.
 Ipse ego Flaminicam poscentem februa vidi ;
 Februa poscenti pinea virga data est.
 Denique quodcunque est, quo pectora nostra piamur,

19. Februa. Expiations, piamina, were called, according to Varro, in the Sabine tongue, Februa, from fervere. Hence the second month was called February, because it was the time appointed for the purifications, &c.

21. Ab rege. From the Rex sacrificulus, see supr. i. 333. Flamine. The Flamines, so called from a cap or fillet, filum or pileum, which they wore on their head, were the priests of particular deities; the chief among them was the Flamen Dialis, mentioned in the text, the priest of Jupiter, who was distinguished by a lictor, sella curulis, and toga prætexta, and enjoyed from his office the privilege of sitting in the senate. This situation was one of considerable dignity, Maximæ dignationis inter xv. flamines. Fest. The dress of the Flamines in general, consisted of a purple robe called lana, which seems to have been thrown over their toga, and a conical cap called apex. Lucan. i. 604. Lunigerosque apices. Virg. Æneid, viii. 664. Lanas. When the victims were killed, two youths, of noble families, touched their faces with a sword dipped in the blood, then some of the attendants ran up, and washed away the stain with a piece of wool soaked in milk. Hence the name februa, i. e. cleansing or purifying, was given to the wool, lana.

23. Lictor. Of the Flamen Dialis, called Flaminus. Domibus. The house of the Flamen Dial. which the lictor purified with a salted cake. Torrida cum mica farra, i. e. Far tostum comminutum, et sale mistum.

25. Nomen idem. sc. Februa. Ramo. A branch of the pine. See infr. 28. Arbore pura. A tree untouched by the axe, or used for sacred purposes. 'Pura laurea.' Propert.

27. Flaminicam. The wife of the Flamen Dialis. She could never be divorced, and if she died, the Flamen resigned his office, because he could not perform certain sacred rites without her assistance. Plutarch Q. Rom. 49.

28. Pinea. Spinea. Heins. Laurea. Hamburg. The reading, spinea, is supported by the impression known to have been entertained by the ancients, that the "thorn" had a peculiar charm against evil of every description. This subject is alluded to more fully in the sixth Book of the Fasti.

Actoriden Peleus, ipsum quoque Pelea Phoci

30. Intonsos. Unshaven, used here for antiquos. ‘Non ita Romuli Præscriptum et intonsi Catonis auspiciis.’ Horat. Od. ii. 15. A barber was first introduced into Rome by Ticinius Mena, A.U. 654. Plin. N. H. vii. 59.

31. Mensis. The month, February. Ab his. sc. Februus. Luperci. The priests of Pan, the god of shepherds ; so called from lupus, a wolf, because Pan was supposed to protect the flocks from wolves. Serv. in Virg. Æneid, viii. 343. Hence the place where he was worshipped, was called Lupercal, and his festival, Lupercalia, which was celebrated during this month. See inf. 333. The Luperci ran through the city naked, whence omne solum lustrant, having only a girdle of goats’ skins round their waist, and thongs of the same in their hands, secta pelle, with which they struck whomsoever they met ; particularly married women, who were hence supposed to be rendered prolific. There were three companies, sodalitates, of the Luperci ; two ancient, called Fabiani and Quintiliani, (a Fabio et Quintilio præpositis suis, Fest.) and a third called Julii, in honour of Julius Cæsar, over which Antony was the first to preside. See Cic. Phil. ii. 34, 43. As the Luperci were the most ancient order of priests, said to have been instituted by

Evander, Liv. i. 5, so they continued the longest, not having been abolished until the time of Anastasius, who died A.D. 518.

32. Idque piâmen habent. And consider that, i. e. their running up and down the city, an expiation.

33. Aut quia placatis, &c. In the month of February they not only offered sacrifices to atone for the living, but also to expiate or appease the dead : had they neglected the latter, they believed that the names of the departed would not rest in their tombs, but by wandering abroad infect the air with pestilence, &c. Hence, placatis tempora pura, &c.

34. Ferales. (A ferendis ad tumulum epulis, vel a ferendis pecudibus, Fest.) The Dies ferales, were the days upon which the sacrifices and oblations for the dead were made. ‘Feralia munera.’ Ovid Trist. iii. 3, 81. ‘Cæna feralis,’ Juvenal, v. 85. See infr. 419—456.

37. Græcia. The custom was borrowed from the Greeks. Ille, sc. Greece, thinks that the guilty being purified, lay aside, are absolved from, their impious crimes.

39. Actoriden. The grandson of Actor, Patroclus, the son of *Menæti*us by Sthenele, called also Philomela, or Polymela. He was obliged to fly from Opus, where his father reigned, on account of his having accidentally murdered Clysonomus, the son of Amphidamus, and retired to the court of Peleus, king of Phthia, father of Achilles, where he was kindly received. The sequel of his history is well known. Pelea. King of Thessaly, son of Æacus and Endeis, the daughter of Chiron. Having been accessory to the death of his brother Phocus, he was obliged to leave his father's dominions, and sought refuge in Iolchos, a town of Magnesia in Thessaly, of which Acastus was then sovereign, who purified Peleus of his crime with the usual ceremonies. Others have given a different account of the matter, for which see Class. Dic. Peleus.

40. Æmonias. Thessalian; so called either from Hæmus, see supr. i. 390, or Hæmon, the son of Deucalion. Hæmonidas. Zulich. Solvit. Absolved.

41. Per inane. Through the air. Draconibus. With bridled dragons; Τοῖνδ' ὄχημα πατρὸς "Ἠλίου πατρὸς· Δίδωσιν ἡμῖν, ἔργμα πολυμίας χερσὶν· Eurip. Med. 1318–1319, and Schol. in loc. ὀχουμένην δρακοντίοις ἔργμασι. Horat. Epod. iii. 13. Hoc delibutis ulta donis pellicem Serpente fugit alite. Seneca Med. 1022. Squamosa gemini colla serpentis jugo Summissa præbent. Ægeus. King of Athens, son of Pandion. He was persuaded by Medea to promise her an asylum in his kingdom after she had re-vengeed herself upon Jason. Eurip. Med. 710, hence credulus.

42. Immerita—ope. An aid which she did not deserve, from the destructive use to which she applied it. Phasida. Medea, so called from Phasis, a river of Colchis, where she was born; by this river the Argonauts went up the country to obtain the golden fleece. See Class. Dic. Medea, Jason, and Argonautæ.

43. Amphiaræides. Alcmaeon, son of the seer Amphiaræus; who, concealing himself that he might not be obliged to accompany the Argives in their expedition against Thebes, where he knew he was destined to perish, was betrayed by his wife Eriphyle. She was bribed by Polynices, with a golden necklace, to discover his retreat, and Amphiaræus was compelled to go to the war, having first charged his son to revenge his death. When Alcmaeon received the news of his father having fallen, he murdered his mother, for which he was persecuted by the Furies until purified by the river Achelous.

—Naupactoo Acheloo. A river of Acarnania, which rises in Mount Pindus, and dividing Ætolia from Acarnania, falls into the Sinus Corinthiacus. It is called Naupactous, from Naupactus, a town of Ætolia, which derived its name from the ship-building carried on there; now called Lepanto.

Primus, ut est, Jani mensis et antè fuit.
 Qui sequitur Janum, veteris fuit ultimus anni :
 Tu quoque sacrorum, Termine, finis eras. 50
 Primus enim Jani mensis, quia janua prima est :
 Qui sacer est imis Manibus, imus erat.
 Postmodo creduntur spatio distantia longo

KAL. FEB. ÆDES SOSPITÆ DICATA.

PRINCIPIO mensis Phrygiæ contermina Matri 55
 Sospita delubris dicitur aucta novis.
 Nunc ubi sint illis, quæris, sacrata Kalendis
 Tempa Deæ? longo procubuere die.
 Cætera ne simili caderent labefacta ruinâ
 Cavet sacrati provida cura Ducis ; 60
 Sub quo delubris sentitur nulla senectus :

48. Antè. Formerly ; i. e. in the time of Numa Pompilius, for the year of Romulus began with March. See i. 39.

49. Qui sequitur Janum. February was the last month of the old year, because the purifications &c. took place in this month, and also the festival of the god Terminus. See infr. 525.

51. Janua. Over which Janus presided.

52. Imus. The last.

53. Postmodo creduntur, &c. i. e. The Decemviri are supposed subsequently to have joined in immediate succession the periods, tempora, sc. January and February, separated by a considerable interval, spatio distantia longo, having in the time of Numa been considered the beginning and ending of the year. It was determined, A. U. 299, by a decree of the senate and the order of the people, that three ambassadors should be sent to Athens to copy the celebrated code of laws by Solon and to examine the institutions, customs, and laws of the other states in Greece. Liv. iii.

31. Upon their return, ten men, Decemviri, were chosen from among the Patricians, with supreme power, and without the liberty of appeal, to draw up a body of laws, legibus scribendis, all the other magistrates having previously abdicated their offices, Liv. iii. 32, 33. They made the alteration in the kalendar mentioned in the text.

55. Principio. On the kalends of February. Phrygiæ—Matri. Cybele. See infr. Fast. iv. 179, et seq. Contermina. Close to, sc. on the Palatine hill, where the temple of Cybele stood.

56. Sospita. The Preserver. Juno was worshipped under this title; from sospes, th. σώζω. Aucta. Enriched. It does not appear by whom this temple was built.

57. Nunc ubi sint illis, quæris. Nunc ubi sunt illis quæ sunt. Ursin. Patav. Illis kalendis. So Fast. iii. 'Nonis sacrata quod illis Tempa patent,' and Fast. iv. 'Pinguia cur illis gustantur larda kalendis.'

58. Longo procubuere die. Have sunk to ruin through time.

60. Ducis. Augustus.

Nec satis est homines, obligat ille Deos.
 Templorum positor, templorum sancte repostor,
 Sit Superis, opto, mutua cura tuî.
 Dent tibi cælestes, quot tu cælestibus, annos;
 Proque tuâ maneant in statione domo.

LUCARIA.

Tum quoque vicini lucus celebratur Asyli;
 Quâ petit æquoreas advena Tiberis aquas.

SACRA VESTÆ ET TONANTIS.

Ad penetrale Numæ, Capitolinumque Tonantem,
 Inque Jovis summâ cæditur arce bidens.

62. Nec satis est homines. sc. obligare. Obligat ille Deos. He endears the gods to him by his pious attention.

63. Positor. Founder. Repositor. Refector. Casaub. ad Suet. Neapol. Restorer. So Suetonius, 'Principes viros sæpe hortatus est, ut pro facultate quisque monumentis vel novis, vel reffectis et excultis Urbem adornarent; multaque a multis extructa sunt,' &c. The taste of Augustus was no less displayed in the number and magnificence of various other besides sacred edifices.

66. Maneant in statione, i. e. Excubent. Keep watch.

67. Tum. On the kalends of February. This consecrated grove lucus, or asylum, in honour of which the Lucaria were celebrated by a procession to the place, lay between the Via Salaria and the Tiber. By some it is said to have been the asylum which Romulus opened, in imitation of the Greeks, as a refuge from punishment for crime; by others, to have been the retreat to which the Romans betook themselves in their flight from the Gauls. Asyli. From Gr.  $\alpha$  and  $\sigma\acute{\upsilon}\lambda\eta$ . Helemi. Heins. as in Fast. vi. 'Adjacet antiquus Tiberino lucus Helemi.'

68. Advena. The Tiber is so called because it rises in the Apennines, and flows thence to Rome. Aquas. The Tuscan sea into which the Tiber is emptied.

69. Ad penetrale Numæ. The temple of Vesta, beside the palace of Numa, 'Ire dejectum momenta Regis Templaque Vestæ. Horat. Od. i. 2. 15—16. Capitolinumque Tonantem. The temple of Jupiter Tonans, built by Augustus in the Capitol. Jovis summa arce. The temple of Jupiter Opt. Max. The Arx Capitolina is distinguished also by Livy and other writers from the Capitol. Arx Summa, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, as Fast. vi. 'Arce quoque in Summa Junoni templa Monetæ.'

70. Bidens. Qu. Duidens, or from Biens. i. e. Biennis. A sheep so called, because at two years old it had two of the front teeth longer than the rest, and was then considered fit for sacrifice.

Sæpe graves pluvias adopertus nubibus auster
Concitat, aut positâ sub nive terra latet.

QUART. NON. FEB. OCCIDUNT LYRA ET LEO.

PROXIMUS Hesperias Titan abiturus in undas,
Gemmae purpureis cùm juga demit equis ;
Illa nocte aliquis, tollens ad sidera vultum, 75
Dicet, ' Ubi est hodie, quæ Lyra fulsit heri ?'
Dumque Lynam quæret, medii quoque terga Leonis
In liquidas subitò mersa notabit aquas.

TERT. NON. FEB. OCCIDIT DELPHIN.

QUEM modò cælatum stellis Delphina videbas,
Is fugiet visus nocte sequente tuos. 80
Seu fuit occultis felix in amoribus index ;
Lesbida cum domino seu tulit ille lynam.

Sæpe avidum fugiens restitit agna lupum :
Sæpe canes leporesque umbrâ cubuere sub unâ ;
Et stetit infestæ proxima cerva leâ.
Et sine lite loquax cum Palladis alite cornix

71. Auster. Qu. Hauster, quia haurit aquas. The south wind, enveloped in clouds, causes the heavy rains. Hence called by the poets 'nubilus,' 'humidus,' 'pluvius,' 'udus,' 'imbrifer.'

73. Proximus, &c. On the evening of the second of February. Titan. The sun.

74. Gemma-juga. The jewelled collars.

77. Dumque Lynam quæret.—Lyra and Leo both set on the fourth of the Nones, the second of February, but Leo in the morning and Lyra in the evening. Medii quoque terga. The hindmost half, for the foremost had already set. i. 591. Constellations, consisting of a number of widely scattered stars, set gradually.

79. Cælatum stellis. Studded with stars, of which there are nine in the constellation of the Dolphin. Stella and Sidus, the one a singular star, the other a constellation, differ in this respect like ἀστὴρ and ἄστρον. So Suidas, ἀστὴρ ἄστρον διαφέρει, ὁ μὲν ἀστὴρ ἓν τι ἔστι, τὸ δὲ ἄστρον ἐκ πολλῶν συνέστηκεν. Delphina. See i. 407.

80. Fugiet visus. Shall set.

81. Seu fuit, &c. See i. 407. sub. fin.

82. Cum domino. With Arion who was born in Methymna a town of Lesbos.

89. Et sine lite. Because the crow and the owl, Palladis ales, so called from being sacred to Minerva, are generally at variance. Ælian. Hist. Animal. iii. 9.

91. Cynthia. Diana, so called from Cynthus, a mountain of Delos, so high as to overshadow the whole island. On it Latona gave birth to Apollo and Diana.

92. Fraternis-modis. At the melodious strains of her brother Apollo.

93. Nomen Arionium, &c. Arion's fame had spread through the Sicilian cities, and Italy was charmed with his lyric minstrelsy.

94. Ausonis ora. Italy, so called from Auson, son of Ulysses and Calypso, from whom the Ausones, a people of Italy, descended.

95. Puppim. A Corinthian vessel.

96. Quasitas arte opes. The wealth acquired by his musical skill.

101. Quid tibi, &c. The poet apostrophises the helmsman.—Dubiam pinum. The frail bark.

105. Ridentque moram. Ridicule the nature of the respite he required.

107. Tyrio his tinctam murice. The Dibapha, from Gr. δις and βαπτω, to dye twice. Tyre was famous for the brilliancy of its purple dye, which was said to be obtained from the juice of a shell-fish, murex. Pallam. Properly the outer robe of a woman, 'Pallam signis auroque rigentem, Et circumtextum croceo velamen acantho, Ornatus Argivæ Helenæ.' Virg. Æneid, i. 648 ; but it was worn also by musicians and actors. Suet. Calig. 54. Ovid. Art. Amat. iii. 1-12 ; derived either from πάλλω, or quod palam et foris gerebatur, Varr. L. L. iv. 30.

108. Suos sonos. Its harmonious tones.

110. Trajectus penna, &c. 'As the swan chants its mournful numbers having its grey temples pierced by the cruel feathered dart.' According to some com-

That eagle's fate and mine are one,
Which on the shaft that made him die,
Espy'd a feather of his own,
Wherewith he wont to soar on high.

Waller.

111. Ornatus. Equipped, sc. Pallâ purpureâ.

113. Inde. Forthwith. Fide majus. Beyond belief. Tergo, &c. They say that the Dolphin, with arched back, placed himself beneath the unwonted burden. To this Propertius alludes, ii. Eleg. 25. 'Sed tibi subsidio Delphinum currere vidi, Qui puto Arioniam vexerat ante lyram.'

115. Ille sedens, &c. He, seated, holds the harp, and in requital for his carriage sings, and soothes with song the waters of the deep. Citharam, Gr. κιθάρα, from κινεῖν τὸ ἔργον, quia movet amorem.

117. Di pia facta vident. The gods regard deeds of mercy.

119. Nunc mihi, &c. Would I had now a thousand tongues and your genius, Homer, by which Achilles has been handed down to fame! Pectus. So Gr. φρενίς, means præcordia or prudentia.

120. Mæonide. Homer, so called from Mæonia, a town of Lydia, at the foot of Mount Tmolus, where he is supposed to have been born, or according to others, from his father Mæon.

121. Dum canimus, &c. While with alternate quill we celebrate in song the hallowed nones. Sacras. Consecrated by public consent, Augustus having received on this day the title, Pater Patriæ. Sueton, ii. 58. This occurred A. U. 758, seven years after his thirteenth consulate. Alterno, sc. In elegiac verse. Pectine. Pecten, called also plectrum, the quill with which stringed instruments, especially wire-strung, were played. It is still used abroad with the mandolin. Nonas. The nones were not always so distinguished, see. i. 57.

122. Maximus, &c. Hence the greatest share of glory is heaped upon the Fasti, sc. by their recording the praises of Augustus

Deficit ingenium, majoraque viribus urgent ;
 Hæc mihi præcipuo est ore canenda dies.
 Quid volui demens elegis imponere tantum 125
 Ponderis ? heroi res erat ista pedis.
 Sancte Pater Patriæ ; tibi Plebs, tibi Curia nomen
 Hoc dedit, hoc dedimus nos tibi nomen Eques.
 Res tamen antè dedit, serò quoque vera tulisti
 Nomina ; jam pridem tu Pater orbis eras. 130
 Hoc tu per terras, quod in æthere Jupiter alto, Nomen habes ; hominum tu Pater, ille Deûm.
 Romule, concedas ; facit hic tua magna tuendo and the rites ordained on his account.

123. Deficit ingenium. So Horace, ‘Cupidum, pater optime vires deficiunt.’ Sat. ii. l. 12. Majoraque viribus. Too great for my ability.

124. Præcipuo ore. In a distinguished strain.

125. Elegis. Because from their nature unsuited to the grandeur of epic poetry.

126. Heroi, &c. Which was a subject for heroic measure, sc. hexameter verse.

127. Pater Patriæ. This title was first conferred upon Cicero by the senate, either by the advice of Cato, Appian. B. Civ. ii. 431, or of Catulus, Cic. Pison, 3, after his suppression of Catiline’s conspiracy ; ‘Roma patrem Patriæ Ciceronem libera dixit.’ Juvenal, viii. 244. It was next decreed to Julius Cæsar, Suet. 76, some of whose coins are still extant with the inscription. Cicero proposed that it should be given to Augustus, while yet very young, Phil. xiii. 11. The title, Pater Patriæ, denoted chiefly the paternal affection which it was incumbent on the emperors to entertain towards their subjects ; and also that power which, by the Roman law, a father could exercise over his children. Dio. liii. 18. Senec. Clem. i. 14. Augustus is said to have been anxious to be called Romulus, that he might be considered the second founder of the city ; see supr. 63, but he gave up the idea lest he should be suspected of aiming at sovereign power ; Dio. liii. 16 ; and accepted the title Augustus, which was proposed in the senate to be conferred upon him by Munatius Plancus ; Suet. Aug. 7. Servius says that Virgil in allusion to the desire mentioned above, describes him under the name of Quirinus. Æneid, i. 296. Georg. iii. 27. Curia. The Senate, so called from their place of meeting. Anciently there were only three places where the Senate used to be convened, Curia or Senacula ; two within the city, and the temple of Bellona outside it. Afterwards the number was increased, and they assembled in the temples of Jupiter Stator, Apollo, Mars, &c. The Curia were consecrated as temples by the augurs, but not to any particular deity.

128. Eques. The Equestrian order to which Ovid belonged, nos dedimus, &c.

129. Res tamen, &c. Reality however, conferred the title previously, i. e. Augustus was in fact deserving of the appellation before it was publicly bestowed.

130. Orbis. Urbis. Heins.

133. Concedas. Give way, acknowledge your inferiority.

Mœnia ; tu dederas transilienda Remo.
 Te Tatius, parvique Cures, Cœninaque sensit ; 135
 Hoc duce, Romanum est solis utrumque latus.
 Tu breve nescio quid victæ telluris habebas ;
 Quodcunque est alto sub Jove, Cæsar habet.
 Tu rapis ; hic castas, Duce se, jubet esse maritas :
 Tu recipis luco, submovet ille nefas. 140
 Vis tibi grata fuit ; florent sub Cæsare leges :

134. Tu dederas transilienda Remo. You left them liable to be vaulted over by Remus. See Fast. iii. 70.

135. Te Tatius, &c. The conquests of Romulus were confined to the countries adjacent to Rome. He overthrew the Sabines, Cœninaenses ; whose king Acron he slew and obtained the first spolia opima ; Antenates, and Veientes. At his death, however, the empire was bounded by eighteen miles distance from the city. Tatius. King of the Sabines ; afterwards joint sovereign with Romulus. Virg. Æneid, viii. 639. Cures. An inconsiderable town of the Sabines ; the birth place of Numa ; ‘Curibus parvis et paupere terra Missus in imperium magnum.’ Virg. Æneid, vi. 812. Canina. A town of the Sabines.

136. Hoc duce. Augustus ; see Virg. Æneid, vi. 725. The limits which he set to the Roman empire, and which in his will he advised his successors not to exceed, Tacit. Ann. i. 11. Dio. lvi. 33, 41, were the Atlantic ocean on the west, and the Euphrates on the east ; on the north the Danube and the Rhine ; and on the south, the cataracts of the Nile, and the deserts of Africa and Mount Atlas ; including the whole Mediterranean sea, and the best part of the then known world, so that the Romans were not without foundation called ‘Rerum domini,’ Virg. Æneid, i. 282, and Rome itself, ‘Lux orbis terrarum, atque arx omnium gentium.’ Cic. Cat. iv. 6. ‘Septem URBS alta jugis quæ toti præsidet orbi.’—Propert ii. 11. 57. Utrumque latus. The eastern and western hemisphere.

137. Tu, Romulus. Victæ Telluris. supr. 135.

139. Rapis. See Fast. iii. 197. Castas—esse maritas. In the later period of the Roman Republic the same liberty of divorce was exercised by the women as by the men. Some think that this privilege was permitted them by the law of the Twelve Tables, in imitation of the Athenians, Plutarch. in Alcibiad. It would appear otherwise, however, as they could not exercise this right even in the time of Plautus ; Mercat. iv. 6, except so far as that a woman, when her husband was absent for a certain time, might have been at liberty to marry another, Plaut. Stich. i. l. 29. Afterwards some women deserted their husbands so frequently, that Seneca says they reckoned their years not from the number of consuls, but of husbands, De Benef. iii. 16. So, Juvenal ; ‘Fiunt octo mariti quinque per autumnos,’ vi. 228. Martial. vi. 7, often without any just cause, Cic. Fam. viii. 7. Augustus is said to have restricted this license of Bona gratia divorces as they are called, Suet. Aug. 34, hence castus, &c.

140. Luco. Alluding to the Asylum opened by Romulus ; see Tu Domini nomen, Principis ille tenet.

Te Remus incusat; veniam dedit hostibus ille :
Cælestem fecit te Pater; ille Patrem.

AQUARIUS ORITUR.

JAM puer Idæus mediâ tenus eminet alvo; 145
Et liquidas misto nectare fundit aquas.
En etiam, si quis borean horrere solebat, supr. n. 67. Submovet ille nefas. So Horace, 'Evaganti fræna licentiæ Injecit, amovitque culpas, Et veteres revocavit artes.' Od. iv. 15.

142. Domini. Augustus would not allow himself to be called Dominus, Suet. 53. nor Tiberius, Id. 27, because that word properly signifies a master of slaves, qui domi præest vel imperat; Ter. Eun. iii. 2, 33. Dio. liii. 44. Principis. i. e. Princeps Senatûs; Imperator, Id. xliii. 44, Cæsar, Id. xlv. 47, were among the titles conferred upon Augustus.

144. Pater. Mars, the reputed father of Romulus. The poet means to say that Romulus was ranked among the deities on his father's account, whereas Augustus cælestem fecit patrem, caused his father, sc. by adoption, Julius Cæsar, to be ranked among the gods and paid him divine honours.

145. Puer Idæus. Ganymede, son of Tros, king of the Trojans. While hunting on Mount Ida in Phrygia he was carried up to heaven by Jove's eagle, Virg. Æneid. v. 254. Horat. Od. iv. 4, l. et seq. where he took the place of Hebe as cup bearer to the gods. Apollonius asserts that he was raised to this dignity on account of the remarkable beauty of his person, Argonaut. iii.; Xenophon and others attribute his elevation to his mental endowments, Xen. in Sympos. Accordingly his name may be derived either from Gr. γάνυμι, gaudeo, or ἄγαν and νύ, intens. and μῆδος, consilium. Ganymede was enrolled among the signs of the Zodiac under the title of Aquarius. For an explanation of the probable import of the fable regarding Ganymede, see Cic. Tusc. Disp. iii. Media tenus-alvo. Rises to the waist.

146. Et liquidas. So Virg. 'Extremoque irrorat Aquarius anno.' Georg. iii. 304. 'Inversum contristat Aquarius annum.' Horat. Sat. i. 1. 36.

'And fierce Aquarius stains the inverted year.'—Thomson's Winter.

147. Borean. Gr. βορέας. The north wind, called by the Latins Aquilo. Boreas was personified by the poets, some of whom make him the son of Astræus and Aurora, others the son of the river Strymon. He carried away Orithyia, daughter of Erechtheus king of Athens, of whom he became enamoured, having seen her gathering flowers on the banks of the river Cephissus, and brought her to Thrace, where he dwelt in a cave;

148. Zephyris. Derived from Gr.

ζών φέρειν, vitam ferre. The west wind; the Favonius of the Latins. According to the poets, Zephyrus was the son of Astræus and Aurora. He married a nymph called Chloris or Flora, by whom he had a son called Carpos.

Flowers and Fruits are said to have been produced by the genial softness and sweetness of his breath. He is also described as the harbinger of spring and love;

'It ver, et Venus, et Veneris prænuntius ante, Pennatus graditur Zephyrus vestigia propter.'

Lucret.

'When first the soul of love is sent abroad,

Warm thro' the vital air, and on the heart

Harmonious seizes.

strays.'

Id. Spring, 32.

Mitior aura, Al.

149. Quintus. On the fifth of the ides, the ninth of February.

150. Lucifer. Gr. Φωσφόρος.

The planet Venus, or morning star; called Hesperus, when it appears after sunset in the west.

According to some mythologists,

Lucifer was the son of Jupiter and Aurora. In the text, Lucifer stands for dies. Quintus ubi æquo-

And winter oft at eve resumes the breeze, Chills the pale morn, and bids the driving sleets

Deform the day delightful.'

Thomson's Spring, 18.

153. Tertia nox. The third of the ides. Custodem-Ursæ. Arctophylax, from Gr. ἄρκτον φυλάτ-τειν, quia Arcton vel ursam custo-

dit, or Boötes, a constellation into which Arcas, the son of Jupiter and Callisto, was changed.

154. Geminos exseruisse pedes.

Consequently on the third of the ides, Arcturus, between the legs of Boötes, becomes visible. It is a star of the first magnitude, near the tail of Ursa Major, whence the name Arcturus is de-derived, from Gr. ἄρκτος, ursa, and ὀρθή, cauda.

155. Hamadryadas. From the Greek, ἄμα, simul, and δρυς, quer- cus. Nymphs who presided over trees, with which they were said to live and die. It is reported of Arcas, see supr. 153, that while engaged in the chase, he found a

Hamadryad in danger of perishing, in consequence of the tree which she inhabited being nearly carried away by the violent current of a river. Arcas changed its course, and the nymph, Prospelea, grateful for her safety, married her deliverer, and bore him two sons,

Elatus and Aphidas. Jaculatricem

ἰοχέαιραν. Hom.

Callisto sacri pars fuit una chori.

Signa propinqua micant. Prior est, quam dicimus Arcton :

Arctophylax formam terga sequentis habet.

Sævit adhuc, canamque rogat Saturnia Tethyn,

Mænaliæ tactis ne lavet Arcton aquis.

Idibus agrestis fumant altaria Fauni,

Hic ubi discretas insula rumpit aquas.

156. Callisto. Daughter of Lycaon, king of Arcadia. See infr.

n. 157. Pars una. One, i. e. Callisto was one of the sacred band consisting of Hamadryads, and their leader, the archeress Diana.

157. Signa. The constellations Arctophylax and Arctus, or Great Bear. Callisto was changed into a bear by Juno who was jealous of her having attracted the attention of Jupiter by her singular beauty. While in this form on earth she was near being killed by her son Arcas, who met her when hunting in the woods; Jupiter then placed her as a constellation in the heavens. Propinqua micant. Shine close to each other.

159. Sævit adhuc. She, sc. Saturnia, is still incensed. So Virgil, 'Sævæ memorem Junonis ob iram.' Æneid, i. 4. Canamque—Tethyn. Tethys was the daughter of Uranus and Terra, and wife of Oceanus. She was considered the mother of the deities, hence, canam and Oceanus the father 'Ὠκεανόν τε, θεῶν γένεσιν, καὶ μητέρα Τηθύν. Iliad, xiv. 302.

160. Mænaliæ. From Mænalus a mountain of Arcadia where Callisto was born. Ne lavet. So Virgil, 'Arctos Oceani metuentes æquore tingi.' Georg. i. 246.

"Ἀρκτον θ', ἣν καὶ ὀμαζαν ἐπὶ κλησιν καλέουσιν,

"Ἡ τ' αὐτοῦ στρέφεται, καὶ τ' Ὀρίωνα δοκεῖσι.

Ὅη δ' ὀμμορός ἐστι λοετρῶν ὠκεανῶιο.
Iliad xviii. 487.

161. Idibus. On the ides, the thirteenth of February, sacrifices were offered to Faunus, during the festival Faunalia. Faunus was the son of Picus and grandson of Saturn; see Virg. Æneid, vii. 48. He is said to have reigned in Italy B.C. 1300, and was celebrated for his wisdom and prophetic skill; he was worshipped as a deity after his decease, and consulted for oracles; Virg. Æneid, vii. 81, et seq. He built a temple in honour of Pan at the foot of the Palatine hill. He is frequently called Sylvanus, and is by some supposed to be the same with Pan; see infr. 236.

162. Insula. See i. 292. The Tiberina Insula Sacra, an island at the mouth of the Tiber formed by its being divided into two branches; discretas rumpit aquas; consecrated to Æsculapius, who in the form of a serpent came from Epidaurus, and was worshipped as a deity, after he had landed upon it. It was formed according to Livy, by heaps of straw having been thrown into the river from the fields of Tarquin, which settling there, and becoming firm and solid from the rapid accumulation of other matter, afforded a foundation for temples and porticoes.

FABIORUM CÆDES.

HÆC fuit illa dies, in quâ Veientibus arvis
 Ter centum Fabii, ter cecidere duo.
 Una domus vires et onus suscepit Urbis ; 165
 Sumunt gentiles arma professa manus.
 Egreditur castris miles generosus ab îdem,
 E queis dux fieri quilibet aptus erat ;
 Carmentis portæ dextro via proxima Jano est :
 Ire per hanc noli, quisquis es ; omen habet. 170
 [Illâ fama refert Fabios exisse trecentos :
 Porta vacat culpâ ; sed tamen omen habet.]
 Ut celeri passu Cremeram tetigere rapacem,

163. Hæc fuit illa dies. Ovid mentions the ides of Feb. as the day upon which the calamitous destruction of the Fabii occurred ; Livy writes as follows, ‘ Tum de diebus religiosis agitari captum, diemque ad xv kalendas Sextiles, duplici clade insignem, quo die ad Cremeram Fabii cæsi, quo deinde ad Alliam cum exitio urbis fœde pugnatum, a posteriore clade Aliensem appellarunt, &c. Lib. iv. sub. init. Veientibus. Veii was a city of Etruria, the constant and powerful rival of Rome, situated on a steep and lofty rock. It was taken after a siege of ten years by Camillus.

164. Fabii. A noble and numerous family at Rome, so called from faba, because some of their ancestors had extensively cultivated pulse. They were said to be descended from Fabius, a supposed son of Hercules by an Italian or Arcadian nymph. They took upon themselves to carry on the war against the Veientes, and after considerable successes were at length surprised, and in a general engagement near the Cremera the whole family, with one exception, consisting of 306 men were slain, B. C. 477. Liv. ii. 46.

165. Vires et onus. Because the Republic was in need both of money and men, and the Fabii, una domus, undertook to supply both of themselves.

166. Sumunt gentiles, &c. The hands of a family, or clan, take up the arms pledged to their country’s safety, arma professa. Forcel.

169. Carmentis portæ, &c. The passage of the gate Carmenta is next to the temple of Janus which is on the right hand, i. e. of those going out of the city. Carmenti. Ursin. Mazar. Zulich. The Porta Carmentalis used to be called Veientina, and Tarpeia, from its vicinity to the Capitol. After the destruction of the Fabii it was always called Scelerata.

170. Omen. sc. malum. It is unlucky. Quisquis es ; omen hab. Quæ fera nomen hab. Ursin.

173. Cremeram. A river of Tuscany, falling into the Tiber, a little to the north of Rome, and not far from Veii. Rapacem. sc. Rapidam, because of its being swollen by the winter rains. Tetigere. Tenuere. Al. see Fast. iii. 217.

- (Turbidus hibernis ille fluebat aquis)
 Castra loco ponunt : destrictis ensibus ipsi 175
 Tyrrhenum valido Marte per agmen eunt.
 Non aliter, quàm cùm Libycâ de rupe leones
 Invadunt sparsos lata per arva greges.
 Diffugiunt hostes, inhonestaque vulnera tergo
 Accipiunt ; Tusco sanguine terra rubet. 180
 Sic iterum, sic sæpe cadunt. Ubi vincere apertè
 Non datur, insidias armaque cæca parant.
 Campus erat ; campi claudebant ultima colles,
 Silvaque montanas oculere apta feras.
 In medio paucos, armentaque rara relinquunt ; 185
 Cætera virgultis abdita turba latet.
 Ecce, velut torrens undis pluvialibus auctus,
 Aut nive, quæ zephyro victa repente fluit,
 Per sata, perque vias fertur ; nec, ut antè solebat,
 Riparum clausas margine finit aquas : 190
 Sic Fabii latis vallem discursibus implent :
 Quosque vident, spernunt : nec metus alter inest.
 Quò ruitis, generosa domus ? malè creditur hosti ;
 Simplex nobilitas, perfida tela cave.

175. Destrictis, &c. Their swords unsheathed, they penetrate with undaunted bravery the Tuscan troops.

177. Libycâ. Mauritania, a region of Libya in Africa was remarkable for its breed of lions ; so Horace, 'Nec Jubbæ tellus generat, leonum Arida nutrix.' Od. i. 22—15.

179. Inhonesta. Dishonorable, because received in flight. Tergo. In the back, to which is opposed 'pectus percussit honestum,' and 'vulnera ipso loco decora.' Tacit. Homer likewise generally applies the epithet γενναῖος to one who falls by an honorable wound, and δυσγενναῖος in the opposite sense. Vulnera accipiunt. So Virgil, 'Nec vulnera tergo Accipiunt.' Æneid, iii.

181. Sic iterum. The Fabii obtained repeated victories, so that the Veientes were obliged to employ stratagem, insidias arma- que cæca, with an enemy to whom they were unequal in courage, though far superior in numbers in the field.

183. Ultima. The limits.

184. Oculere. To conceal. Occulo-is-ui ; from ob and colo, i.e. colendo sive arando tegere.

185. Paucos. A few men. Armentaque rara. Herds here and there ; to entice the enemy to plunder.

186. Turba. The main body of the Tuscan army. Latent. Heins.

188. Zephyro victa. Thawed by the west wind.

190. Finit. Restrains, confines.

192. Quosque vident spernunt. They make light of the few who were visible. Nec metus alter inest. They had no apprehension from any other quarter.

194. Simplex nobilitas. High birth is unsuspecting, beware the weapons of treachery.

Fraude perit virtus ; in apertos undique campos	195
Prosiliunt hostes, et latus omne tenent.
Quid faciant pauci contra tot millia fortes ?
Quidve, quod in misero tempore restet, habent ?
Sicut aper silvis longè Laurentibus actus
Fulmineo celeres dissipat ore canes ;	200
Mox tamen ipse perit : sic non moriuntur inulti ;
Vulneraque alternâ dantque feruntque manu.
Una dies Fabios ad bellum miserat omnes,
Ad bellum missos perdidit una dies.
Ut tamen Herculeæ superessent semina gentis,	205
Credibile est ipsos consuluisse Deos.
Nam puer impubes, et adhuc non utilis armis,
Unus de Fabiâ gente relictus erat.
Scilicet ut posses olim tu, Maxime, nasci ;
Cui res cunctando restituenda foret.	210

198. Quidve, &c. What expedient have they that may avail them in this distressing juncture.

199. Longe—actus. Driven to a distance. Laurentibus. Laurentum was a town of Latium, supposed to be the residence of the ancient kings Picus, Faunus, and Latinus. It derived its name from an adjoining grove of bay-trees midway between Ostia and Antium. See Virg. Æneid, vii. 59, for a different origin of the title. It is supposed to have stood where San Lorenzo is now, which seems to be confirmed from the Via Laurentina leading to it from Rome. It was celebrated for boars, ‘Inter quæ rari Laurentem ponderis aprum, Misimus.’ Martial. Epigr. ix. 19. ‘Nam Laurens (sc. aper,) malus est, ulvis et arundine pinguis.’ Horat. Sat. ii. 4.

200. Fulmineo. Fierce. ‘Fulminei sic dente sues.’ Stat. Sylv.

205. Herculeæ gentis. See supr. n. 164.

206. Ipsos consuluisse, &c.—That the gods themselves provided, &c.

207. Impubes—cris. adj. Of tender years.

209. Olim. In time to come. Maxime. From the single survivor of the Fabian family, unus de Fabia gente, descended Q. Fabius Maximus, who, in the second Punic war, A. U. 536, after the destruction of the Consul Flaminius and his army at Thrasimene, a lake of Etruria near Perugia, was appointed Prodictator. He did not, like his predecessors in command, take the field against Hannibal, but continually harassed and weakened his army by countermarches and ambuscades; hence he was called Cunctator, cunctando, from his declining to engage the enemy openly, ‘Unus homo nobis cunctando restituit rem.’ Ennius.

DEC. SENT. KAL. MART. CORVUS, CRATER, ET ANGUIS ORIUNTUR.

- CONTINUATA loco tria sidera, Corvus et Anguis Et medius Crater inter utrumque jacet.
Idibus illa latent ; oriuntur nocte sequenti :
Quæ sibi cur tria sint consociata, canam.
Fortè Jovi festum Phœbus solenne parabat ; 215
(Non faciet longas fabula nostra moras)
' I mea,' dixit, ' avis, ne quid pia sacra moretur ;
' Et tenuem vivis fontibus affer aquam.'
Corvus inauratum pedibus cratera recurvis
Tollit, et aërium pervolat altus iter. 220
Stabat adhuc duris ficus densissima pomis :
Tentat eam rostro ; non erat apta legi.
Immemor imperii sedisse sub arbore fertur,
Dum fierent tardâ dulcia poma morâ.
Jamque satur nigris longum rapit unguibus hydrum, 225
Ad dominumque redit ; fictaque verba refert :
' Hic mihi causa moræ vivarum obsessor aquarum ;
' Hic tenuit fontes officiumque meum.'
' Addis,' ait, ' culpæ mendacia,' Phœbus, ' et audes Fatidicum verbis fallere velle Deum ? 230
' At tibi, dum lactens hærebit in arbore ficus,

211. Continuata loco. Contiguous ; from, or in, their situation ; or loco might allude to these constellations having succeeded to the position which had been occupied by Cancer, Leo, and Virgo.

213. Illa sc. sidera. Nocte sequenti. xvi. Kal. Mart.

217. Mea avis. See Fast. i. n. 290. The crow was under the protection of Apollo on account of its auguries, Fast. i. n. 180. ' Planget Phœbeius ales.' Stat. ii. Silvar. de Corv.

218. Et tenuem, &c. And bring a little water from the gushing fountains.

219. Corvus, &c. The crow takes up a gilded goblet in his crooked talons, and soars aloft on his aerial route.

221. Adhuc duris pomis. With fruit as yet unripe.

222. Non erat apta legi. It was not easy to be gathered ; because of its unripeness.

223. Imperii. Of the direction he had received from Apollo.

225. Hydram. From Gr. ὕδωρ, aqua ; a water-snake.

226. Fictaque verba refert. And makes a feigned excuse.

227. Vivarum obsessor aquarum. The keeper of the living springs.

228. Hic tenuit, &c. He withheld the waters, and the fulfilment of my task.

230. Verbis, Versis. Mazar. Veris, Hamburg. Veri, Al.

231. Lactens. The Latins called the juice of a green fig lac, milk ; the Greeks, ὀπός ; and στακτή.

‘De nullo gelidæ fonte bibantur aquæ.’
 Dixit; et, antiqui monumenta perennia facti,
 Anguis, Avis, Crater, sidera juncta micant.
 Tertia post Idus nudos Aurora Lupercos 235
 Adspicit: et Fauni sacra bicornis eunt.
 Dicite, Pierides, sacrorum quæ sit origo:
 Attigerint Latios unde petita domos.
 Pana deum pecoris veteres coluisse feruntur
 Arcades; Arcadiis plurimus ille jugis. 240
 Testis erit Pholoë, testes Stymphalides undæ, Quique citis Ladon in mare currit aqvis;

232. De nullo, &c. ‘Corvi ante solstitium generant; iidem ægrescunt sexagenis diebus, siti maxime, antequam fici coquantur autumno.’ Plin. x. 12.

233. Perennia. Patentia. Ursin.

235. Tertia Aurora. The third day after the ides, sc. xv. kal. Mart. Lupercos. See supr. n. 31.

236. Fauni-bicornis. Pan is here called Faunus, a generic name of the Satyrs. Various accounts are given of this Deity’s descent. Homer in his ‘Hymns,’ makes him the son of Mercury, goat-footed and with horns, as in the text:

Ἀμφὶ μοι Ἑρμείας φίλον, γόνον
 ἔνεπε μούσα,

Ἀιγιάδην, δεικέρωτα, φιλόκροτον.

According to Epimenides, Pan and Arcas were the twin offspring of Jupiter and Callisto. Herodotus makes him the son of Mercury and Penelope. Others say that he was the son of Penelope by all her suitors, whence he was called Pan. He was the chief of the rural deities; the god of shepherds and the chase. See infr. 291. According to Polyænus, he is represented as having horns, because he commanded the army of Bacchus, in the war between the gods and the giants, and upon that occasion invented the cornua, i.e. alas, the disposition of a line of battle with wings. Stratagem. i. 2. According to others, he continued to wear horns from the time that he changed himself into a goat to elude Typhon, having advised the other deities to effect their escape likewise by assuming the shape of different animals. See i. n. 523. For the service which he rendered them on this occasion by his prudent counsel, it is said that the gods in gratitude ranked him among the constellations by the title of Capricorn, Hygin. Fab. 296.

237. Pierides. Pierus, a mountain supposed to have given name to Pieria in Macedonia, lies to the north of Pheræ in Thessaly; so called from Pierus, a poet who is said to have been the first who sacrificed to the Muses, thence called Pierides. Schol. in Juvenal.

238. Attigerint, &c. Whence derived have they reached the Latin abodes.

240. Plurimus. Most celebrated.

241. Pholoë. A mountain of Arcadia. Stymphalides. Stymphalus was the name both of a city and river in Arcadia.

242. Ladon. A small but beautiful river of Arcadia, falling into the Alpheus from north to south; and yielding the finest water of all the rivers in Greece. It is celebrated for the story of Cinctaque pinetis nemoris juga Nonacrini,

Altaque Cyllene, Parrhasiæque nives.

Pan erat armenti custos, Pan numen equarum ;

245

Munus ob incolumes ille ferebat oves.

Transtulit Evander silvestria numina secum.

Hic, ubi nunc urbs est, tum locus urbis erat.

Inde Deum colimus, devectaque sacra Pelasgis.

Syrinx, daughter of the Ladon, who, in order that she might escape the importunities of Pan, was changed by the gods into a reed, called by the Greeks σύριγξ, syrinx; Ovid. Metam. i. v. 691. Martial. ix. ep. 63.

243. Cinctaque Pinetis. Cinctaque Spinetis. Al. Encircled with groves of pine. Nonacrini. Nonacris was a town of Arcadia which with two others, Callia and Diponæ, was called Tripolis. It was famous for its pestilential spring, the Styx; the water of which, it is said, could not be contained in any vessel but one formed of the hoof of a mule. Vitruv. v. 3.

244. Cyllene. A lofty mountain of Arcadia on the summit of which stood the temple of Mercury, thence called Cyllenius, who was supposed to have been born there. Parrhasiæque. See i. 428. Nives. The snows on the summits of the Arcadian mountains.

245. Numen equarum. Num. aquarum. Al. The latter reading is probably the more correct, as Pan is said to have been the leader of the choir of water nymphs, &c.

Αἱ δὲ περίξ θαλεροῖσι χορὸν ποσὶν ἐστήσαντο

Ἵδριαδες νύμφαι, νύμφαι Ἀμαδρυάδες.

He was also the god of fishermen as appears from the prayers to him contained in several Greek inscriptions for success in the craft. Sophocles also calls him ἀλίπυλαγκτον, per mare vagantem. The variety of objects under his tutelage is also mentioned in one of the hymns of Orpheus:

Ἀρμονίαν κόσμῳ κρέκων φιλοπαίγμονι μάτῃ.

Φαντασιῶν ἐτάραγε, φόβων ἔκπαγλε βροτείων.

Αἰγόνόμοις χάριων ἀνα πίδακας ἡδὲ τὲ βῦταις

Εὖσκοπε ἐρηγῆτορ, ἡχοῦς φιλεῖ, σύγχορῃ νυμφῶν

Ποντοφυῆς, γενέτωρ πάντων, πολυνύμῃ δαίμον.

"Now lulling with sweet melody

The weary world to rest;

Awaking now the panic fears

That haunt the human breast.

Now seeking with the thirsty flock

The mountain-river's side;

Now in the herdsman's lowly cot

Delighted to abide.

Huntsman, keen-eyed; whom Echo won

With lingering tones of love;

The chase is o'er; the dance begun;

Nymphs of the fount and grove

The leader of their revels call,

To grace the flowery sod;

Parent of ocean, Lord of all;

Pan, many-titled God."

C. S. S.

247. Transtulit. Transferred; on his removal to Latium. Silvestria numina. The sylvan deities, Pan, &c.

249. Pelasgis. i. e. The Arcadians. Arcadia was anciently called Pelasgia, Lycaonia, &c.

- Flamen ad hæc prisco more Dialis erat. 250
 Cur igitur currant ; et cur, sic currere mos est,
 Nuda ferant posita corpora veste, rogas ?
 Ipse deus velox discurrere gaudet in altis
 Montibus, et subitas concitat ille feras.
 Ipse deus nudus nudos jubet ire ministros : 255
 Nec satis ad cursum commoda vestis erat.
 Ante Jovem genitum terras habuisse feruntur
 Arcades : et Luna gens prior illa fuit.
 Vita feræ similis, nullos agitata per usus :

 Nectar erat palmis hausta duabus aqua.
 Nullus anhelabat sub adunco vomere taurus :
 Nulla sub imperio terra colentis erat :
 Nullus adhuc erat usus equi : se quisque ferebat. 265

250. Ad hæc. In the performance of these rites, the priest of Jupiter was engaged, erat, according to the old custom. This was not objectionable as it might appear to be ; for Pan, like Jupiter, was considered the representative of universal nature, and was therefore entitled to some respect, sc. the attendance of the Flamen Dialis. Adhuc. Al.

252. Sic. sc. Positâ veste.

253. Ipse Deus velox, &c. The active god himself delights to course over the lofty mountains, and he pursues the startled game. Some explain concitat, he terrifies, in allusion to the terror, πανικὰ, or πανικὰ δέσματα, panic fears, which Pan could excite. Concipit fugas. Ursin. Concipit feras. Al.

255. Jubet ire. Amat ire. Cod. Thuan.

258. Luna prior. See i. N. 419. It is supposed by some that this was the origin of the crescent having been worn upon the buskins of senators and their sons at Rome, as a symbol of their high descent, Stat. Sylv. v.

2. 28. 'Felix, et sapiens, et nobilis, et generosus, Appositam nigræ lunam subtexit alutæ.' Juvenal. vii. 191. According to others the c which was worn on the senators' buskins was a sign of the number, centum, of which that body was originally composed.

259. Feræ. sc. vita ferina.—Nullos, &c. Passed without any social intercourse. So Horace, 'Mutum et turpe pecus.' Sat. i. 3, 100. Τὸς δὲ ἐξ ἀρχῆς γενήσιντας τῶν ἀνθρώπων φασὶν ἐν ἀτάκτῳ καὶ θηριώδει βίῳ καθιστῶτας, &c. Diod. Sicul. i.

260. Artis adhuc, &c. They were still an uncivilized and uncouth crowd. Adhuc. Ad hoc. Al.

261. Pro domibus, &c. They used the boughs of trees for their abodes, and weeds instead of corn.

262. Palmis duabus. In the hollow of both hands.

265. Usus equi. Bellerophon is said to have first taught the use of the horse.

- Ibat ovis lana corpus amicta sua.

266. Lana sua. Because there was no need for their being shorn.

267. Sub Jove durabant. They used to dwell, or persevered in dwelling, in the open air. So Horace, 'Manet sub Jove frigido Venator.' Od. i. 25—6.

268. Notos. From Gr. νότος, humor. The south winds.

269. Detecti. i. e. The Luperci, naked, restore the memorial of an antique usage, and give evidence of their old resources.

271. Cornipedi Fauno. The poet proceeds to give another reason for the priests of Pan being naked at the celebration of his festival. Cervipedi. Zulich. Cæsa capella. A goat was sacrificed to Pan because of his having feet like that animal.

273. Verubus. Spits or broaches. Gr. ὀβελλός. a versando. Varr. Salignis. Made of willow or sal-low.

274. Extæ. From exsecta, th. scco. Medias, &c. At noon-day,

Tenente dies. Zulich. Mazar. Voss.

276. Campo. Sc. Ludis or Pulveris. The Campus Martius was an extensive plain along the Tiber where the Roman youth used to exercise. It belonged originally to the Tarquins, 'Superbi regis ager.' Juvenal. vi. 523, and after their expulsion was consecrated to Mars. Liv. ii. 5. It was frequently called κατ' ἰσχὺν, Campus, The plain, Horat. Od. iii. 1, 10.

277. Cæstibus. Gauntlets, a cædendo. They were a species of gloves, chirothecæ, which had lead or iron sewed into them to make the blow more effective from the weight of its fall. Virg. Æneid, v. 379, 400. Jaculis. So Virgil, 'Spicula contorquent, cursuque ictuque lacesunt.' Æneid, vii. 165. Missi pondere saxi. Gr. λιθοβολοί. The stone may have been thrown from the hand or discharged from a sling.

280. Eripe. Rescue them.

283. Detrahit. Detulit. Voss. Arond. Mazar.

 Quæve diem tali nomine causa notet.
 Ilia Vestalis cælestia semina partu
 Ediderat, patruo regna tenente suo.
 Is jubet auferri parvos, et in amne necari. 295
 Quid facis? ex istis Romulus alter erit.
 Jussa recusantes peragunt lachrymosa ministri;

285. Fabiique simul. The Fabii were the associates of Remus, the Quinctilii of Romulus.

288. Non potuisse. sc. vincere.

290. Et memorem, &c. And that which had a prosperous result, has also permanent renown.

291. Lupercal. The place where Pan was worshipped, so called from Luperci; see supr. 31, and infr. 331. It was a cave in the Palatine hill, consecrated to this deity by Evander. Lycaeus, from Gr. λύκος, lupus, a mountain of Arcadia is said also to have been dedicated to Pan, as the guardian of flocks; whence Virgil, 'Gelida monstrat sub rupe Lupercal, Parrhasio dictum Panos de more Lycæi. Æneid, viii. 342. Lupercal, besides the origin assigned to the term in the text may be derived from luere, i. e. sacrificare, caprum, because of their sacrificing a goat to Pan in the place already mentioned, or from luere, i. e. expiare per caprum, to make atonement by such a sacrifice.

292. Quæve, &c. Or what cause distinguishes the day by such a title, sc. Lupercalia. Tanto nomine, conj. Heins.

293. Ilia. Called also Rhea, daughter of Numitor king of Alba. Vestalis. She was devoted to the service of Vesta by Amulius her uncle, who usurped the sovereignty of Alba and banished his brother, in order that she might not by becoming a mother endanger his tenure of the crown. His precautions were unavailing, as she gave birth to twins, of whom she asserted Mars to be the father, hence cælestia semina. She was buried alive—the punishment inflicted upon Vestal Virgins, who were convicted of a violation of their vows of chastity—on the banks of the Tiber, whence Horace 'uxorius amnis.' Od. i. 2. 20.

296. Quid facis. This may be taken either as a remonstrance against the act, or to show the futility of the usurper's designs.

297. Recusantes. Reluctant.

Flent tamen, et geminos in loca jussa ferunt.
Albula, quem Tiberin mersus Tiberinus in undâ

Longiùs ; ex illis unus, an alter, ait :

‘ At quam sunt similes ! at quàm formosus uterque ! 305

‘ Plus tamen ex illis iste vigoris habet.

‘ Si genus arguitur vultu, ni fallit imago,

298. Et geminos. Ut geminos, would be the better reading. Loca jussa. Loca sola. Heins.

299. Albula. The ancient name of the Tiber ; so called from the whiteness of its waters, albis aquis. It was called Tiber after Tiberinus Sylvius, successor to Capetus as king of the Albans, who was drowned in it.

301. Fora. Sc. The Forum Boarium, &c. The river was so swollen by the winter rains that it overflowed the city ; So Horace, ‘ vagus et sinistra Labitur ripa.’ Od. i. 2. 18.

302. Maxime Circe. The Circus Maximus was built by Tarquinius Priscus, and afterwards at different times considerably enlarged and beautified. It was situated between the Palatine and Aventine hills, whence, quaque jacent valles tuæ. It was a mile in circumference, and surrounded by a dyke or canal, called Euripus, ten feet broad, and equally deep ; it had also porticoes three stories high, στῶαι τριστηγίαι ; both improvements designed and executed by Julius Cæsar. It is said to have contained at least 150,000 persons, Dionys. iii. 68 ; according to Pliny, 250,000. Plin. xxxvi. 15. s. 24. Here all the games and shews were celebrated, in which the Romans of all classes took such interest and delight. ‘ Duas tantum res anxixs (Populus R.)

optat, Panem, et Circenses.’—Juvenal. Sat. x. 80. It was very generally frequented by sharpers and fortune-tellers, sortilegi or divini, jugglers, præstigiatores, &c. ; hence ‘ Fallacem Circum.’ Horat. Sat. i. 6. 113. It is said to have been called Circus, in honour of Circe the daughter of the sun, to whom it was consecrated ; whence also, according to some, its name Apollinaris ; which Livy, however, assigns to the Circus Flaminius on account of a temple of Apollo in its vicinity. Liv. iii. 54. 63. There were several others, Circus Vaticanus, &c. to which may be added those built by the emperor Nero, Tacit. Ann. xiv. Caracalla, Helio-gabalus, &c.

304. Longius. They could proceed no further on account of the swelling of the river. Ex illis, sc. ministris. One, or, an, another of the attendants says. So ‘ Saucins, an sanus, numquid tua signa reliqui.’ iv. 7.

305. At. And yet how like they are. At, is an adversative conjunction derived from and equivalent to the Gr. ἀλλά, Voss. in Etymol. ‘ Una mater oppugnat, at quæ mater ?’ Cic. pro. Cluent. c. pænult. In the text it is expressive of admiration and Compassion.

306. Iste. Sc. Romulus.

307. Ni fallit. Nec fallit. Heins.

310. Præcipiti. ‘Sed nec Di nec homines, aut ipsam (matrem) aut stirpem a crudelitate regia vindicant: Sacerdos ipsa in custodiam datur; pueros in profluentem aquam mitti jubet.’ Liv.

311. Ferret opem, &c. Your mother surely would bring you aid were she not herself in need of help, who has in one day been made a mother and childless.

314. Corpora. Pignora, Patav. and Heins. Sinu. In the creek formed by the flood.

315. Sentire putares. You would think that they were conscious of their fate.

317. Cavus alveus. The hollow wooden trough.

318. Quantum fati. In allusion to the foundation of the Roman empire by Romulus and its subsequent splendour. Parva tabella. Curta tab. Heins. The small plank, sc. alveus; ‘Et tabula distinguitur unda,’ Juvenal. xiv. 228.

319. Appulsus. Having approached.

322. Rumina ficus. Poetically for Ruminalis ficus. This name is either a corruption of the original Romularis; or it may be derived from ruma or rumen, i. e. mamma, a teat or pap, and so called in remembrance of the twins having been found under this fig-tree and suckled by a wolf. ‘Geminos huic ubera circum Ludere pendentes pueros, et lambere matrem Impavidos,’ Virg. Æneid, viii. 631 et seq.: According to some it is derived from rumen, the throat, because under the shade of this tree the cattle used to chew the cud, ruminare. The words remanent vestigia, 321, cannot be more aptly commented upon than by the following passage ‘Eodem anno Ruminalem arborem in comitio, quæ super octingentos et quadraginta ante annos Remi Romulique infantiam texerat, mortuis ramalibus, et arescente trunco deminutam, prodigii loco habitum est, donec in fatus reviresceret.’ Tacit. in fin. xiii. Ann.

323. Fæta. Newly delivered.

 Quid vetat Arcadio dictos a monte Lupercos ?
 Faunus in Arcadia templa Lycæus habet.

326. Prodere. To consign to death. Perdere. Al.

328. Et fingit, &c. So Virgil, ' Illam tereti cervice reflexam Mulcere alternos, et corpora fingere lingua.' Æneid, viii. 633, et seq.

331. Nomen. Sc. Lupercal. Lupercis. See supr. 31, for the generally received origin of the term. Plutarch derives it as above, 331. This opinion, however, is justly controverted by Livy and Dionysius of Halicarnassus who state that the Luperci and Lupercalia were introduced into Italy by Evander, which is still further borne out by Virgil, Æneid, viii. 343. It is not easy to perceive how a festival in honour of Pan could be so far identified with that which was said to be celebrated in remembrance of the wolf that suckled Romulus and Remus, as that the latter should merge altogether into the former, which, admitting the former opinion, must appear to be the case at once to any who inquire into the nature and details of this remarkable rite.

332. Magna præmia. In the reputation attached to her name. This whole fable is said to have arisen from the surname Lupa, by which, in consequence of the levity of her conduct, the wife of Faustulus the preserver of the twins, was generally designated.

333. Quid vetat, &c. The poet proposes another etymology for Lupercus, from the analogy between the term and Lycæus, the one being derived from lupus, as the other from λύκος.

334. Faunus in Arcadia, &c. Lycaon, the son of Pelasgus, and the first sovereign of Arcadia, contemporary of Cecrops king of Athens, is said to have been the founder of the Lupercalia which he celebrated with great splendour.

 Proximus æthereos excipe, Piscis, equos. 340
 Te memorant fratremque tuum (nam juncta micatis

335. Orta dies fuerit. The poet having explained fully the origin and details of the Lupercalia, proceeds to treat of the days, their succession and character. Dies. The day on which the Lupercalia was celebrated, xv. Kal. Mart. Feb. 15th. On this day the sun entered the sign Pisces, see infr. 340, and the winds were variable for the six following days. Fuerit. Fuerat. Heins.

336. Prodidit fidem. Sc. Is not to be trusted, from its inconstancy.

337. Non constant. Are unsteady.

338. Carceris Æolii. So Virgil, 'Huic vasto rex Æolus antro Luctantes ventos tempestatesque sonoras Imperio premit, ac vinculis ac carcere frenat,' Æneid, i. 36. Αἶολον ὅστ' ἀνέμοις αἰθρηγενέσσιν ἀνασσει, Κεῖνον γὰρ ταμῖν' ἀνέμων ποίησε Κρονίων. Argon. iv 765. Æolus was the son of Jupiter by Aesta or Sergesta, the daughter of Hippotas, a Trojan, whence he is called Hippotades. He was king of Lipara and the adjoining islands, called after him Æolian, situated between Italy and Sicily. One of these, Strongyle; from Gr. στρογγύς, round, now Stromboli; being volcanic, it is said that the ancient inhabitants could tell from the smoke, three days before, what wind should blow, hence the fable that Æolus was king or god of the winds.

339. Levis. From Gr. λεπίς, cortex; relieved or unburthened by the sun having entered another sign; κοῦφος, αβαρής. Obliqua. The urn which Aquarius held is turned obliquely, or inverted, as if the water flowed from it towards Piscis. Subsidit. Sinks down; expressive of languor after fatigue. See supr. levis.

340. Æthereos equos. The horses of the sun. Piscis. Sc. Boreus, so called from its looking towards the north; its place is under the arm of Andromeda. The other fish is called Notius, looking towards the south; it is placed below the shoulder of the constellation Equus.

341. Juncta micatis signa. The constellation Pisces, is called by Aratus σύνδεσμος ὑποῦρανιος; either fish being connected by a band, or train of twelve stars, called by the Greeks συνδεσμός τῶν ἰχθύων. The sign Boreus consisted of twelve, and Notius of seventeen stars. The poet narrates the cause of their being enrolled among the constellations, Te memorant, &c.

342. Duos Deos. Dione and Cupid.

 'Et Dis auxilium ferte duobus,' ait.
 Nec mora; prosiluit. Pisces subiere gemelli;
 Pro quo nunc dignum sidera munus habent.

343. Typhona. See supr. i. 523.
Dione. Daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, and mother of Venus, with whom she is frequently identified by the poets, as in the text.

345. Euphraten. A river of Asia.
Cupidine. Cupid was the son of Jupiter and Venus. According to Hesiod, he was produced at the same time with Chaos and the Earth. He is generally represented as a winged boy, with a bow and quiver, and wearing a wreath of roses; in constant attendance upon his mother Venus. 'Fervidus tecum puer, et solutis Gratia zonis, properentque nymphæ,' Horat. Od. i. 30, 4.

346. Palæstinæ aquæ. The Euphrates, poetically so called, from its bounding Syria, at the opposite extremity of which, next to Arabia Petræa, Palestine is situated.

347. Populus. The poplar tree, of which the ancients reckoned three species; the black, αἰγείρος, the white, λεύκη, and that called Lybisca, the Libyan, which is our aspen, with a very small dark leaf. The poplar was sacred to Hercules;—Λεύκαν, Ἡρακλῆος ἱερὸν ἔργον. Theocrit. Idyll. ii.; Populus Alcidæ gratissima; Virg. Eclog. 7.; Herculeæque arbos umbrosa coronæ. Georg. ii. 66. It is a favorite tree with the poets, and is supposed, on account of the melancholy rustling of its leaves, when agitated by the breeze, to have been introduced into that matchless simile, 'Qualis populea mœrens Philomela sub umbra.' &c. Georg. iv. 511. Cannæ, Canna, Gr. φάλις, a reed or cane; a species of the arundo, with which it is frequently confounded, but smaller and more delicate. This, as also the poplar and osier, thrives best in a marshy soil, or by a river's side.

348. Salices. Osiers or willows; of which there were several kinds. Græca salix; Varr. i. R. R. c. 24, which was of a yellow colour; Amerina, called also Sabina salix; 'Atque Amerina parant retinacula viti,' Georg. i. 265, which was red, and the salix Gallica, of a faded purple, and others, which were distinguished by their height and strength. His. sc. by the willows, &c. Hos. Al. sc. Venus and Cupid. Salices has, Maz. Zulich.

350. Hostiles. Of the giants.

351. Nymphæ. The nymphs of the river.

353. Prosiluit. She plunged into the water,

354. Pro quo, &c. In return for which they, sc. Pisces gemelli, enjoy a constellation, a merited

DEC. TERT. KAL. MART. QUIRINALIA.

PROXIMA lux vacua est : at tertia dicta Quirino ;
Qui tenet hoc nomen, Romulus anté fuit.
Sive quod hasta Curis priscis est dicta Sabinis ;
(Bellicus à telo venit in astra Deus) 360
Sive suum regi nomen posuere Quirites ;
Seu quia Romanis junxerat ille Cures.
Nam pater armipotens, postquam nova mœnia vidit,
Multaque Romuleâ bella peracta manu,
' Jupiter,' inquit, ' habet Romana potentia vires ; 365
' Sanguinis officio non eget illa mei.
' Redde patri natum : quamvis intercidit alter,
' Pro se, proque Remo, qui mihi restat, erit.

honour, i. e. have been raised to the dignity of a constellation which they deserved. Sidera habent, for sidus facti. So in Art. Amat. 'Munus habe cœlum ;' whence some read, nunc cœlum sidera nomen, Nauger. Petav. Zulich. Nunc cernis sidera nomen, Ursin.

355. Inde nefas, &c. Whatever be the cause, it is upon record that the Syrians were averse to fish, ἀπὶ ἰχθύων. 'Οὐκ, διὰ τὰ Σύρων πάτρια καὶ ἡμᾶς τῶν ἰχθύων ἀπιστέησιν.' Athenæus, viii. Genus, sc. piscium.

356. Timidi. Superstitious ; timor is frequently used in the same sense with the δεισιδαιμονία of the Greeks. 'Primus in orbe does fecit timor.' Stat. Theb. iii. 661. 'Quone malo mentem concussa ? timore deorum.' Horat. Sat. ii. 3. 295.

357. Proxima lux. XIV. Kal. Mart. Feb. 16th. Vacua. Has no mark of distinction. Tertia. XIII. kal. Mart. Dicta. Consecrated, because on this day the festival

Quirinalia, in honour of Romulus was held.

359. Sive quod. The poet proceeds to account for the origin of the name Quirinus. Sabinis. The Sabines called Mars also Curinus or Quirinus, from curis, a spear.

360. A telo. In consequence of his signal achievements in war, Romulus was raised to the stars.

361. Suum nomen. A name derived from their own. Quirites. The Romans.

362. Cures. It was agreed upon the union of the Romans and Sabines, that the former should be called Quirites in honour of Tatius, king of Cures, while Rome should retain its original name, derived from its founder.

363. Puter. Mars. Nova mœnia. Rome.

366. Sanguinis mei. Sc. Romulus, said to have been the son of Mars.

367. Alter. Remus, slain by his brother Romulus, for having vaulted in contempt over the new walls of Rome. According to others, he was killed by some one unknown in a quarrel.

“Unus erit, quem tu tolles in cœrula cœli,”

‘Tu mihi dixisti: sint rata dicta Jovis.’

370

Jupiter annuerat; nutu tremefactus uterque

Est polus, et cœli pondera sensit Atlas.

Est locus, antiqui Capream dixere paludem;

Forté tuis illic, Romule, jura dabas.

Sol fugit, et remonent subeuntia nubila cœlum;

375

Et gravis effusis decidit imber aquis.

Hinc tonat, hinc missis abrupitur ignibus æther:

369. Tuus erit. This verse is copied from Ennius, where he treats in his Annals of the same subject as that in the text.

372. Atlas. Son of Japetus and Clymene, according to others of Asia, Asope, or Libye. He married Pleione, by whom he had seven daughters—the Pleiâdes, ranked among the constellations, by Jupiter. He is also said to have been the father of the Hyades, so called after their brother Hyas, who perished from the bite of an adder, and was so deeply regretted by his sisters, that they died of grief. They were also raised to the stars by Jupiter. Atlas was the name of a mountain in Mauritania, so high, that its summit was not visible, hence it was said that a monarch, of the same name and country, supported the heavens. So Æschylus in Prometh, who makes him the brother of Oceanus;

Ωκεαν. Οὐδῆτ, ἐπεὶ με κασιγνήτου
τύχαι

Τείρους Ἀτλαντος, ὅς πρὸς ἐσπερι-ους τόπους

Ἔσθηκε κίον οὐρανῶν τε καὶ χθονὸς

Ἵμμοις ῥειδῶν, ἄχθος οὐκ ἐνάγχαλον.

According to others, Atlas was a Lybian, and an astronomer, who frequented a mountain, called after him, for the purpose of making his observations, whence the fable of his bearing the firmament on his shoulders. Some of the poets describe Atlas as a sovereign of Hesperia, who having refused the rights of hospitality to Perseus, in consequence of his having been told that he should be deprived of his throne by a son of Jupiter, was changed into a mountain by Perseus' displaying to him the head of Medusa. He is said in the text to have been made conscious of the weight of the heavens, cœli pondera, &c. from their trembling at the nod of Jove. Sensit, Novit. Al.

373. Capream paludem. (Liv. i. 16, Capræpalus.) A marsh, which lay at a short distance from Rome towards the sea, where Romulus is said to have disappeared in a whirlwind, while either reviewing his army, or promulgating laws. The place was afterwards called Caprilia. Fest.

375. Sol fugit. According to the astronomical tables, this eclipse of the sun occurred, May 26, A. C. 713.

— Et remonent. En remonent. Heins.

376. Imber. From Gr. ομβρος; ‘agmen aquarum largius ex concretis nubibus effusum;’ Apul. de mundo.

377. Hinc tonat, hinc missis. Intonat emissis. Mazar. Abrumpitur. Is cloven; so Virgil, ‘Medium video discedere cœlum.’ Æneid, ix. 20.

Fit fuga : rex patriis astra petebat equis.
 Luctus erat, falsæque Patres in crimine cædis ;
 Hæsissetque animis forsitan illa fides. 380
 Sed Proculus Longâ veniebat Julius Albâ ;
 Lunaque fulgebat ; nec facis usus erat :
 Cùm subito motu nubes crepuere sinistrae :
 Rettulit ille gradus, horrueruntque comæ.
 Pulcher, et humano major, trabeâque decorus, 385
 Romulus in mediâ visus adesse viâ ;

378. Fit fuga. Hence, according to the Greeks, this day was called in the old calendar, POPULIFUGIA, ἡ τροπή του πληθους. Varr. v. L. L. Rex. Romulus. Patriis. He was borne to heaven in the chariot of Mars.

379. Falsæque Patres, &c. 'The fathers were accused of an unsubstantiated murder.' So Livy, 'qui discriptum regem Patrum manibus taciti arguerent.'

381. Proculus. A Roman, who pledged himself by an oath to the people, in order to satisfy their doubts about Romulus, that he had seen and heard him as described in the text. Longa Alba. A colony from Lavinium, in Latium, founded by Ascanius the son of Æneas, at the foot of the Mons Albanus. It was called Alba, from the following prophecy of Helenus ; 'Quum tibi sollicito secreti ad fluminis undam Litoreis ingens inventa sub ilicibus sus, Triginta capitum fetus enixa jacebit, Alba, solo recubans, albi circum ubera nati ; Is locus urbis erit, requies ea certa laborum.' Virg. Æneid, iii. 389, et seq. which is further interpreted, that thirty years after the discovery of this white sow with her farrow, the city should be built there. It was called Longa, from its length, and was the royal residence until the building of Rome, as foretold by Anchises ; 'Lavinia conjux Educet silvis regem, regumque parentem : Unde genus Longa nostrum dominabitur Alba.' Æneid, vi. 766. It was all destroyed, with the exception of its temple, by Tullus Hostilius, who carried the inhabitants to Rome.

382. Lunaque fulgebat. Surgebat. Petav. So Metam. viii. 'Sexta resurgebant orientis cornua lunæ.' Facis. Fax-acis, from Gr. φάω, luceo.

383. Crepuere. Thundered. Sinistræ. Omens on the left, in whatever position the augur stood, were generally considered lucky by the Romans, Plaut. Pseud. ii. 4. 72. Epid. ii. 2, 1. Stat. Theb. iii. 493. Serv. in Virg. Æneid, ii. 693, ix. 631. Cic. Legg. iii. 3. Ovid. Trist. i. 8, 49 ; but sometimes the contrary, Virg. Eclog. i. 18, ix. 15, Ovid. Epist. ii. 115, Trist. iv. 3, 69, in imitation of the Greeks, whose augurs stood with their faces to the north ; and then the east, which was the lucky quarter, was on the right. 'Sinistrum, quod bonum sit, nostri nominaverunt, externi, (sc. Græci) dextrum.' Cic. Div. ii. 36. Hence dexter, is used for felix or faustus, and sinister for infelix or funestus. Thunder on the left was a good omen in every case, except for holding the Comitia, Cic. Div. i. 7, 39.

385. Humano major. So Juvenal, 'Sacra et major imago Humana,' &c. xiii. 221. Trabeaque. See supr. i. n. 37.

Et dixisse simul: 'Prohibe lugere Quirites;
 'Nec violent lachrymis numina nostra suis.
 'Thura ferant, placentque novum pia turba Quirinum;
 'Et patrias artes militiamque colant.' 390

 Farra tamen veteres jaciebant, farra metebant;

387. Dixisse simul. Dixisse viro. Heins.

388. Nec violent. 'Nor let them insult,' &c. because the deifying of their sovereign ought to be rather a matter of exultation than regret.

389. Novum Quirinum. Just enrolled among the gods with the title of Quirinus.

390. Patrias artes colant. So Virgil, 'Tu regere imperio populos Romane memento; Hæ tibi erunt artes: pacisque imponere morem, Parcere subjectis et debellare superbos.' Æneid, vi. 853.

393. Deo. Sc. Romulus. Collis dictus. Sc. Quirinalis; Festus, however, gives a different, and probably the more correct account; 'Quirinalis collis qui nunc dicitur, olim Agonus appellabatur, antequam in eum com-migrarent fere Sabini Curibus venientes, &c. A quo hanc appellationem sortitus est.'

394. Certi dies. See supr. i. n. 658. The Quirinalia belonged also to the class of Feriæ Statæ or Stativæ. Paterna. Romulus was generally addressed by the title of Pater.

395. Lux eadem. The same day on which the Quirinalia was celebrated was appointed for the 'Stultorum Festa,' the festival of fools; the reason is stated in the text.

396. Parva quidem, &c. A trifling indeed, but appropriate reason is suggested.

397. Non habuit, &c. The primitive earth did not enjoy experienced husbandmen. Lassabant. 'Gravis armis miles ait, multo jam fractus membra labore.' Horat. Sat. i. 1, 4. 402. Primitias. "Απρχαι. The first fruits. Cereri. See supr. i. n. 127. Resecta. Reaped.

403. Usibus admoniti. Warned by experience.

404. Multaque peccato, &c. By their ignorance of the proper method of roasting the corn, they suffered many and severe losses, sometimes burning it to ashes, nigras pro farre favillas, and again setting fire to their cottages.

407. Dea Fornax. In order to remedy the evils mentioned above, a deity was created, called Fornax, lit. a furnace, to whom prayers and offerings were presented to secure them against loss or accident at this particular time. The festival so instituted in honour of this deity, was called Fornacalia. It is said to have originated with Numa : 'Numa instituit Deos fruge colere,' &c. 'Is et Fornacalia instituit, farris torrendi ferias.' Plin. xviii. 2. This festival was ranked among the Feriae Imperativæ, those occasionally appointed by order of the consul, the prætor, or pontifex maximus. Infra. 409. Nec stata, &c.

408. Ut fruges temperet. That she should moderate the heat of the grain while being roasted. Ut vires temperet. Al.

409. Curio. The Roman people were divided into three tribes, by Romulus, and each tribe was subdivided into ten curiæ. (Ita dicta quod iis rerum publicarum cura commissa sit, Fest. vel potius a κύρια, sc. ἐκκλησία, conventus populi apud Græcos ad jubendum vel vetandum quod e republica censeret esse.) This number was never varied, although the tribes were subsequently increased to thirty-five. Each curia had formerly a chapel or temple for the celebration of the sacred rites, Varr. de L.L. iv. 32. Tacit. Ann. xii. 24. Dionys. ii. 23. He who presided over one curia was called CURIO ; quia sacra curabat. Fest. ; and he who presided over all, CURIO MAXIMUS. This officer was appointed from among the patricians, down to v.c. 544 ; afterwards from the plebeians. Liv. xxvii. Legitimis verbis. In the form prescribed by the ritual. Indicit, nec stata. See supr. n. 407. sub. fin.

411. Multâ tabellâ. To each of the thirty curiæ was attached a tablet, tabella, upon which the name of that class to which it belonged was engraved. Some of them were called after the Sabine women, who had been carried away by the Romans ; others were called after distinguished generals, and the ancient towns of those who had first settled in Rome. Liv. i. 13. Festus. Varro apud Dionys. ii. 83. Plutarch. in Romulo, and others. of these names remain upon record—Forensis, Rapta, Fautia or Saucia, Tatiensis, Tifata, Velienensis, Velita.

413. Stultaque pars populi. Hence Stultorum Ferike ; a part of the people not having found their own proper curia, at the time appointed for the sacrifice, and in consequence at the close of the day, extrema die, the rites of the Fornacalia were obliged to be repeated, sacra relata, &c.

415. Est honor et tumulis. The Quirinalia were succeeded, after an interval of three days, by the Feralia, or festival in honour of the dead, during which offerings were made to the manes of the just. This custom was observed by the Greeks also ; Μαγὰὶ ἡμέραι τοῦ Ἀνέστειταιωνος μηνός, &c. Hesych. The Greek month Anthesterion, included a portion of the February and March of the Romans.

416. In extinctas pyras, i.e. In busta. On the tombs. Servius explains the different acceptations of Pyra, Rogus, and Bustum, Virg. Æneid, xi. 185. et seq. ‘Constituere pyras, sc. the heaps of wood which formed the funeral piles. ‘Subjectisque ignibus atris trcircum accensos Decurrere rogos ;’ the pyræ when lighted, were called rogi. ‘Semiustaque servant Busta ;’ the pyræ so called when extinguished. Pyra, however, is sometimes used in the sense applied to rogus above ; ‘Quem vetus accensa separat ira pyra.’ Ovid in Ibin. 36. Extinctas pyras may also be used for extinctorum pyras. The sepulchres of the dead.

417. Manes. From manus, i.e. bonus, good. The shades of the dead. According to Plato, the souls of the just after death became Lares, those of the wicked, Lemures or Larvæ ; and the term manes was applied to those whose state was uncertain, from the mixed nature of their deserts. Servius, in Virg. Æneid, iii. 63. says that manes signifies the souls of men during the interval between their departure from one body and their taking possession of another, according to the Pythagorean doctrines. The term is applied by some to the two genii, the good and evil, which accompanied individuals from their birth to their grave, and continued to inhabit the tombs even after the bodies had been destroyed, whence the prejudice against those who profaned sepulchres, as they were judged, by having done so, to be guilty of impiety towards the manes. Others make them to be the infernal deities. Pietas pro divite, &c. So Persius, ‘Quin damus id superis, de magnâ quod dare lance Non possit magni Messalæ lippa propago, Compositum jus fasque animo, sanctosque recessus Men-

418. Styx ima. The Styx, a fountain of deadly water, between Nonacris and Pheneus, here used for Inferi.

419. Tegula. The roof or covering of the tomb. The first syllable of this word is short, but its usual quantity is departed from in other instances. Fast. vi. 298. In Ibin. 304. Projectis coronis. With scattered garlands. See Addenda.

421. Inque mero mollita Ceres. Bread, softened by being steeped in wine, or cakes made of flour and wine. Violæque solutæ. And scattered violets.

422. Mediâ viâ. The tombs were generally placed by the road side. Testa. qu. tosta, from torreo. An earthen vessel. Allusion is doubtless made here to the feast called Silicernium, (cana funebris quasi in silice, vel testâ, posita. Serv. in Virg. Æneid, v. 92, vel quod silentes sc. umbræ, eam cernebant vel parentantes qui non degustabant. Donatus in Ter. Adelph. iv. 2, 48), both for the dead and the living. *Relicta. 424. Sua verba. Suitable language.

426. Juste Latine. From what has been recorded of Latinus, he appears to deserve all that is implied by the epithet. Terras tuas. Latium.

427. Patris Genio. To the manes, or shade of his father. Solennia dona. The customary offerings. (The word solennis is variously derived; from sollum, i. e. totum and annus, by Festus; by others from Gr. σολης, totus and αυγους, augustus; and from solus and annus, which is the most probable.) 'Annua vota tamen solemnnesque ordine pompas Exsequer, strueremque suis altaria donis.' Virg. Æneid, v. 53, 54, præced. et seq.

429. Gerunt. Legunt. Voss. Zulich.

430. Parentales dies. The days upon which the oblations or sacrifices to the dead, inferiæ, or parentalia, were made, consisting of urns, victims, garlands, &c. They are sometimes classed with the Feriæ Statæ, and again with the Imperativæ. The offerings were called Feralia Munera, and the act of presenting them, Alicui inferias ferre, vel mittere, et parentare. Cic. Legg. ii. 21. Phil. i. 6. So *Cæs. de Bell. Gall. atonement was made to the ghosts of the Saguntini, &c. Parentare proprie est parentibus justa facere, Ovid. Amor. i. 13, 4.

431. Non impune fuit. This neglect of a rite, considered so important, was not allowed to pass with impunity. Omine. sc. Causâ.

432. Suburbanis rogis. The Romans would not permit a body to be burned or buried within the city, for two reasons, that the priests might not be defiled by accidental contact with a corpse, and that the houses might not be endangered by the number and extent of the funeral fires. For instance, the Flamen Dialis was not allowed to go near a grave, Gell. x. 15; nor the high priest among the Jews, Levit. xxi. 11, and if the Pontifex Maximus had to deliver a funeral oration, a veil was laid over the body to conceal it from his sight. The places for burial were either private or public; the private in fields or gardens, usually near the highway, supr. 422, that they might be easily seen, and remind the passengers of their mortality. Hence the frequent inscriptions, 'Siste Viator,' 'Aspice Viator,' &c. on the Via Appia, Aurelia, Flaminia, Tiburtina, &c. Liv. vi. 36, Juvenal, i. 171, Propert, iii. 16, 30. The public places of burial for the rich were commonly the Campus Martius, or Campus

Esquilinus, granted by a decree of the senate, Cic. Phil. ix. 7; for the poor, outside the Esquiline gate, in places called Puticulæ, 'quod in puteos corpora mittebantur,' Varr. de L. L. iv. 5. Horat. Sat. i. 8, 8. The Vestal virgins were buried within the city, quia legibus non tenebantur, Serv. in Virg. Æn. ix. and some illustrious men, as Poplicola, Turbertus, and Fabricius, virtutis causa, legibus soluti; which right descended to their posterity, but was not exercised. The right of building a sepulchre for himself within the Pomærium, was decreed to Julius Cæsar, as a singular privilege, Dio. xlv. 7.

433. Bustis exisse. See supr. x. 33. Their forefathers, complaining throughout the period of the silent night, are said to have issued from their tombs. So upon the death of Cæsar, 'Simulacra modis pallentia miris Visa sub obscurum noctis,' Virg. Georg. i. 477, and Ovid, on the same subject, 'Umbrasque silentum Erravisse ferunt.'

436. Deformes animas, vulgus inane. 'Unightly ghosts, an unsubstantial crowd.'

437. Præteriti honores. The neglected honours.

438. Venit modus. There came an end.

439. Viduæ cessate puellæ. 'Abstinet maritorum complexibus.' So Forcellinus explains the passage, and proves the correctness of the word puella being taken in the sense of a 'married woman,' from Horat. Od. iii. 22, 2, 'Laborantes utero puellas;' and Propert. El. xiii. 3, 21, 34, where puella is applied to Antiopa, the mother of two grown-up sons, Zethus and Amphion; also Ovid, Heroid, ep. i. 115, where Penelope calls herself puella, having already given birth to Telemachus. It is much more likely that puella is to be understood in its limited sense, 'young virgins,' and so opposed in a degree to matura, infr. 441; viduæ cessate, 'continue unwedded;' this explanation is further consistent with the succeeding lines, which evidently refer to the marriage ceremony.

Nec tibi, quæ cupidæ matura videbere matri,

Vidua is frequently understood to mean 'alone,' 'unmarried;' 'Viduam non solum eam, quæ aliquando nupta fuisset, sed eam quoque mulierem, quæ virum non habuisset, appellari ait Labeo; quia vidua sic dicta est, quasi vecors, vesanus, qui sine corde aut sanitate esset; similiter viduam esse dictam, sine duitate.' And again, 'Universim quæcunque seu nupta sive innupta, sine viro cubat, vidua dicitur.' Forcel. in voc. cit. So Livy i. 46, ad fin. 'Se rectius viduam, et illum cælibem futurum fuisse contendere, quam cum impari jungi.' It is very unlikely that viduæ puellæ should mean 'widows;' or that the poet should commence by impressing his injunctions upon such, because independently of its being inauspicious to re-marry at such a time, second marriages were not considered honorable in women, while those who had but once married, and remained in widowhood, were held in particular respect. Hence univira is often found in ancient inscriptions as a term of honour. So, Uni nupta, Propert. iv. ult. Such as married a second time were also excluded from officiating at the annual sacred rites of Female Fortune. Fortuna Muliebris, Dionys. viii. 56. Val. Max. i. 8, 4, Serv. in Virg. Æneid, iv. 19. Vidua is derived from idua, to divide, qu. valde divisa, vel a viro divisa.

440. Puros. Auspicious. Pinea. It is not clear whether spinea, should not be the reading, since the sloetree or blackthorn, spinus, was used as well as the pine, pinus, for torches at the marriage ceremony; see supr. x. 28. Tæda. The ceremony was performed at the house of the bride's father, or nearest relative. In the evening the bride was conducted, ducebatur vel deducebatur, to her husband's house. She was taken apparently by force, abripiebatur, from the arms of her mother or next of kin, in memory of the violence used towards the Sabine women. Three boys, whose parents were living, attended her; two of them supporting her by the arm, and the third bearing a flambeau, tæda pinea vel spinea, before. Festus. Catull. lix. 15. Plin. xvi. 18. There were five other torches carried before her, called Faces Nuptiales. Cic. Chærent. 6, Maritæ, Ovid. Ep. xi. 101. Legitimæ, Lucan. ii. 356. Plutarch Q. Rom. 2.

441. Cupidæ matri. In allusion to the anxiety of mothers for the marriage of their daughters. Matura. So Virgil, 'Jam matura viro, jam plenis nubilis annis.'

Comat virgineas hasta recurva comas.
 Conde tuas, Hymenæe, faces, et ab ignibus atris
 Aufer; habent alias mœsta sepulchra faces.
 Dî quoque templorum foribus celentur opertis; 445

 Nunc animæ tenues, et corpora functa sepulchris
 Errant; nunc posito pascitur umbra cibo.
 Nec tamen hæc ultrà, quàm tot de mense supersint

442. Comat hasta. The hair of the bride was divided into six locks, with the point of a spear. Plut. in Romul. et Quæst. 86 vel 87. If this be the correct interpretation, hasta must be understood to mean the acus celibaris, the δοράτιον of the Greeks, a species of small spear or bodkin, used for the purpose already mentioned; however, the epithet recurva makes it appear much more likely that by hasta we are to understand the acus comatoria, or crimping-pin, Gr. βελόνη, with which the bride's hair was at once arranged and adorned. According to Festus, this hasta was symbolical of the guardianship exercised over matrons, matronæ, by Juno Curitis, so called from curis, i. e. hasta, as has been observed before; or of the bride becoming in time the mother of a race of warriors; or of the dominion exercised by the husband over his wife, the spear being the type of authority.

443. Hymenæe. Hymen, or Hymenæus, the god of wedlock, sometimes called Hymen Hymenæus, was, according to some, the son of Bacchus and Venus, others make him the son of Apollo and Calliope, or Urania, or Clio. He is said to have been the first to ordain the ceremony which makes marriage binding, and hence the honours paid him upon the celebration of the rite. He is said by some to have been the son of Magnes, highly accomplished in the art of music, of a beauty approaching to feminine; and that he expired while singing the praises of Bacchus upon his marriage with Althea or Ariadne. Ignibus atris. From the gloomy torches of the Feralia. See Fast. vi. 205.

444. Alias. Distinct.

445. Celentur. The temple doors were closed in order that the gods and their priests might be secured from all inauspicious sights. It is said that the statues of the deities on the highways were covered with a veil when likely to be passed by a funeral, &c. Supr. n. 432.

447. Corpora functa sepulchris. The bodies of the dead. The phrase functa sepulchris, is equivalent to functus futo, Valer. Max. i. c. ult. n. 5, or functus morte. Velleius, ii. 49.

448. Posito pascitur umbra cibo. During the Feralia, banquets used to be prepared in the vicinity of the tombs, upon which the manes were supposed to feast. It was thought that they delighted in blood, Tertullian de Spect. whence various animals, especially such as the deceased had been fond of, were slain at the funeral pile, and thrown into it; Plin. viii. 40, s. 61.

449. Nec tamen, &c. The Feralia were held, xii. Kal. Mart. including which, there were eleven days to the end of the month, the number of feet in a hexameter and pentameter line, quot habent, &c. This is rather a fanciful periphrasis, whereby it is to be understood simply that the Feralia lasted for one day.

 Tum cantata ligat cum fusco licia rhombo,

451. Iusta. Funeral obsequies, so called from jus, 'quia hæc maxime defunctis debentur.'

454. Tacitæ. The goddess of silence, whose worship was ordained by Numa. The poet proceeds to recount some additional rites accompanying the Feralia.

455. Tria thura. Three grains of frankincense. 'Tus et thus lachryma exiguæ arboris in Arabia, qua siccata adoletur in sacris.' Forcel. Sub limine. Where the slanderers who were to be silenced were likely to pass, and where the tiny mouse, &c.

457. Cantata. Enchanted. Cum fusco licia rhombo. Some copies read plumbo, lead having been used by the ancients in charms. The reading in the text is probably the more correct, as the same expression occurs, Ovid. Amor. i. el. 8, 8. 'Scit bene quid gramen quid torto concita rhombo Licia, quid valeat virus amantis equæ.' Fusco, alludes to the colour of the licia, clues of thread which were wound round the spindle or spinning-wheel, rhombus. They were of different shades; 'Terna tibi hæc primum triplici diversa colore Licia circumdo.' Virg. Ecl. 8, 73, where Servius, 'Bene titur liciis, quæ ita stamen implicant, at hæc adolescentis mentem implicare contendit.' From this comment, as also the passage in the text, the reader may be referred to that part of Sonthey's noble poem, Thalaba, where the hero is taken in the snare of the sorceress.

'He found a woman in the cave,
 A solitary woman,
 Who by the fire was spinning,
 And singing as she spun.
 The pine boughs they blazed cheerfully,
 And her face was bright with the flame,
 Her face was as a damsel's face;
 And yet her hair was grey.
 She bade him welcome with a smile,
 And still continued spinning,
 And singing as she spun.
 The thread the woman drew
 Was finer than the silkworm's,
 Was finer than the gossamer;
 The song she sung was low and sweet,
 And Thalaba knew not the words.

'And up she raised her bright blue eyes,
 And sweetly she smil'd on him,
 And he conceiv'd no ill;
 And round and round his right hand,
 And round and round his left,
 He wound the thread so fine.
 And then again the woman spake,
 And still her speech was song;
 "Now thy strength, O stranger, strain;
 Now then break the slender chain."

 Was woven by magic hands,
 And in his cheek the flush of shame
 Arose, commixt with fear.
 She beheld and laughed at him,
 And then again she sung,
 “ My thread is small, my thread is fine,
 But he must be
 A stronger than thee,
 Who can break this thread of mine.
 “ Sister, sister ! hear my voice !
 Sister, sister ! come and rejoice !
 The web is spun,
 The prize is won,
 The work is done,
 For I have made captive Hodeirah’s son.”’

The intention of the licia in the text was to bind the tongue.

458. Nigras versat in ore fabas. This was also done at the Lemuralia.

460. Mænæ. A cackrel, pilchard, or minnow, whose head was roast in the fire, the mouth having been closed with pitch, and sewed with a brass needle.

It was so offered as an emblem of silence to the goddess Tacita. Obsutum. So Virgil. Georg. iv. ‘ Huic geminæ nares et spiritus oris Multa reluctanti obsuitur.’ The reading of this passage as it stands in the text, was selected, after considerable difficulty and research, by the indefatigable Heinsius.

462. Plus tamen ipsa. Hence the reading vinosa has been adopted, v. 453, instead of annosa.

463. Vinximus. We have charmed or bound by magic arts ; Forcel. Vincire is a term peculiar to such enchantments.

465. Forsitan, &c. The poet proceeds to account for the origin of the Dea Muta.

467. Juturnæ. Her history has been already given.

469. Coryleta. Copses of hazle.

470. Cognatas. Because she was the daughter of the nymph Venilia, and a Naiad. There was also a fountain, called Juturna, in Latium.

Utilitas vestræ magna sororis erit.

478. Mergat. Mandet. Heins. 'Heu quis salsis fluctibus mandet me ex sublimi vertice saxi.' Att. Philoc. Cic. Tusc. Quæst. ii.

479. Tiberinides udæ. The nymphs of the river Tiber.

480. Thalamos tuos. The Anio, a river of Italy, falling into the Tiber, three miles to the north of Rome, near Antemnæ, and rising in a mountain near Treba. It is here called the thalamus of Ilia, because she is supposed to have been wedded to the god of this river. See Horat. Od. i. 2, where she is made the spouse of the Tiber.

481. Lara. Called also Laranda. Prima sed illi, &c. The first syllable repeated, Lala, was her former name, bestowed from her garrulity, ex vitio positum, from ααλειν, garrire.

483. Almo. The father of the nymph Lara. A rivulet in the territory of Rome, running from the Via Appia, near the Porta Capena, into the Tiber, a mile below the city. Almon. Ambros. Metam. xiv.

485. Juturnæ stagna. Beside Pallanteum, and not far from the temple of Vesta.

487. Nuptam. Sc. Juno.

489. Quaque est non usa modeste. Which she had used indiscreetly.

490. Mercuriumque. The son of Jupiter and Maia, the daughter of Atlas ; the messenger of Jupiter and of the gods. His name is derived either from merces, because he was the patron of merchants, and god of gain, or qu. Medicurius, 'quod medius inter deos et homines currebat.' The insignia of Mercury are his Petasis, or winged cap ; the Talaria, or winged sandals for his feet ; and a caduceus, or wand, with two serpents twined round it, in his hand. Sometimes, as the god of merchants, he bears a purse, marsupium. Horat. Od. i. 10. Virg. Æneid, iv. 239, viii. 138. Vocat. Rogat. Al. Monet. Ursin. Voss. Zulich.

492. Infernæ paludis. The Styx.

493. Lucus. 'Sic demum lucos Stygios, regna invia vivis, Aspicies.' Virg. Æneid, vi. 164.

Dicitur illa duci tum placuisse deo.
 Vim parat hic: vultu pro verbis illa precatur; 495
 Et frustra muto nititur ore loqui.
 Fitque gravis, geminosque parit, qui compita servant,
 Et vigilant nostra semper in urbe, Lares.

UNDEC. KAL. MART. CHARISTIA.

PROXIMA cognati dixerunt Charistia cari,
 Et venit socias turba propinqua dapes. 500
 Scilicet à tumultis, et qui periere propinquis,
 Protinus ad vivos ora referre juvat;
 Postque tot amissos, quidquid de sanguine restat,
 Aspicere, et generis dinumerare gradus.
 Innocui veniant; procul hinc, procul impius esto 505
 Frater, et in partus mater acerba suos:
 Cui pater est vivax, qui matris digerit annos,
 Quæ premit invisam socrus iniqua nurum.

494. Duci—deo. Ψυχροπόλος Ἐρμῆς; Ψυχροπόμος; Ψυχραγωγὸς πομπαῖος, Æschyl. Eumen. Νεκροπομῶς Lucian in Dial. Mercur. et Maia.

497. Geminosque—Lares. Deities that presided over the public ways, and were worshipped where cross-roads, compita, met. Forcel. According to the nature of their charge, the Lares were called Urbani, presiding over cities; Familiares, over houses; Rustici, over the country; Compitales, over cross-roads; Marini, over the sea, &c.

499. Proxima. On the day following the Feralia, xi. Kal. Mart. Feb. 19th. Charistia. A solemn festival or banquet, at which none but kinsfolk met, in order that if there had been any contention or misunderstanding amongst them, they might be reconciled again, their differences being made up. Val. Max. ii. 1, n. 8. From Gr. χαρίζομαι, condono. There was a festival wont to be held in Padua, called la Domenica parentela, which bears a close resemblance to the Charistia.

500. Turba propinqua. Relations and kindred.

501. Scilicet, &c. 'It is, in sooth, a pleasure to bring back our discourse, ora referre, at once, to the living, from the tombs and the relatives who are no more.' This was the reason why the Charistia followed immediately the Feralia, and not as has been stated in a note on the passage, in a late edition of the Fasti, 'That the dead might visit their friends, and have their share of the feast!' A moderate acquaintance with the classics, or even common sense, could not fail to detect at once the egregious absurdity of such an interpretation.

507. Vivax. Too long lived. Matris digerit annos. Computes the years his mother has to live.

508. Premittit. Harasses.

Tantalidæ fratres absint, et Iasonis uxor,
 Et quæ ruricolis semina tosta dedit ; 510
 Et soror, et Progne, Tereusque duabus iniquis ;
 Et quicunque suas per scelus auget opes.
 Dis generis date thura, boni : Concordia fertur
 Illo præcipuè mitis adesse die.
 Et libate dapes, ut grati pignus honoris 515
 Nutriat incinctos mista patella Lares.
 Jamque ubi suadebit placidos nox ultima Somnos,

509. Tantalidæ fratres. Atreus and Thyestes, sons of Pelops and Hippodamia, and grandsons of Tantalus. For a history of the crimes of this family, see Class. Dic. Iasonis uxor. Medea.

510. Et quæ. Ino, daughter of Cadmus and Harmonia, married to Athamas, king of Thebes, after he had divorced Nephele, by whom he had Phryxus and Helle. Ino, bent upon the destruction of her step-children, who should inherit the sovereignty to the prejudice of her own, Melicerta and Learchus, gave the husbandmen scorched seed, in expectation that the failure of the harvest would be followed by a famine, and that the augurs, whom she had bribed, would insist, in consequence, upon the sacrifice of Phryxus and Helle to appease the gods.

511. Et soror. Philomela, the daughter of Pandion, king of Athens. Tereus, king of Thrace, having been summoned to assist the Athenians in war, married Progne, who was also the daughter of Pandion, and returned with her to his kingdom. At the request of Progne, he went to Athens again to bring Philomela to see her sister, and having abused her on the way, he cut out her tongue. But Philomela sent Progne a robe upon which she had depicted the perfidy of Tereus, and in revenge Progne served up his son Itys at a banquet on his return. Tereus would have slain her, but that they were changed by the gods into birds. Progne became a swallow, Tereus a hoopoe, and Philomela a nightingale.

513. Dis generis. To the gods of the same kindred. Concordia. Sc. Dea.

515. Libate dapes. Sc. Diis. Ut grati pignus honoris. As a token of grateful respect.

516. Incinctos. The Lares were represented as clothed in the Gabinus habit, which covered the left shoulder, leaving the right bare. ‘Bullaque succinctis Laribus donata pependit.’ Pers. v. 31. They were sometimes clad differently, see supr. i 428. Mista. Some copies read missa, which is to be taken in the sense of oblata: mista, alludes to the nature of what the vessel contained. Patella. A broad vessel, or dish, used in sacrifices. Forcell. ‘Patellæ, vascula parva sacris faciendis apta, quæ erant velut capidulæ, (large pots or jugs, with handles or ears, used at sacrifices), quædam. In his apponebantur diis cibi, præsertim Penatibus Laribusque.’ Festus. Hence the Lares were called Dii Patellarii.

517. Nox ultima. ‘Night far advanced;’ to shew that they had allowed full time for the purposes

Parca precaturæ sumite vina manus :
 Et ' Bene nos, Patriæ, bene te, Pater, optime Cæsar,' Dicite suffuso, per sacra verba, mero. 520

DEC. KAL. MART. TERMINALIA.

Nox ubi transierit, solito celebretur honore
 Separat indicio qui Deus arva suo.
 Termine, sive lapis, sive es defossus in agro Stipes, ab antiquis sic quoque numen habes.
 Te duo diversâ domini pro parte coronant ; 525
 Binaque sarta tibi, binaque liba ferunt.
 Ara fit ; huc ignem curto fert rustica testu
 Sumptum de tepidis ipsa colona focis.
 Ligna senex minuit, concisaque construit alté ;

of the festival. So Virgil, ' Suadentque cadentia sidera somnos.'

518. Parca. Sufficient for a libation. Precaturæ sumite manus. sc. Precaturi manibus sumite.

519. Et, &c. ' And having poured out the wine, say, in the form prescribed, per sacra verba,
 ' May it be well with us, with our country and with thee, Father, most noble Cæsar.' The health of Augustus was always given at private and public entertainments, according to a decree of the senate to that effect. So Horace, ' Te mensis adhibet Deum ; te multa prece, te prosequitur mero, Diffuso pateris, et La-ribus tuum miscet numen.'

521. Nox ubi transierit. On the x. Kal. Mart. Feb. 20th, the Terminalia, or festival of Terminus was held.

523. Termine. From Gr. τέρας, the god who presided over boundaries, and was supposed to punish all unjust usurpation of land.
 The worship of this deity was ordained by Numa, and his symbols, whether stones or trunks of trees which separated their different possessions, were annually crowned by the people of the country with wreaths of flowers, and victims were offered in honour of each Terminus or landmark.

525. Duo domini. The possessors of the territory at either side of the landmark. This alludes to the private sacrifice, the public was celebrated at the sixth milestone from the city.

527. Curto testu. ' In a broken pan ;' evincing the poverty of the country woman. So Juvenal,
 ' cerebrum Testa ferit quoties
 rimosa et curta fenestris Vasa cadunt.' Sat. iii. 70. For testu some propose testa and testo ;
 however, it occurs again elsewhere, and Petron. in Satyr. c. 137,
a med. ' Animadverto Enotheam cum testu ignis pleno venientem ;'
 and in other places. Testuis a neuter noun, indeclinable ; some make it the ablative of Testus—ûs—ui, masc: but without any authority.
Colona is supposed, with good reason, to be used for colonia, such a figure being common.
 Forcel.

- Et solidâ ramos figere pugnat humo. 530
 Dum sicco primas irritat cortice flammâs,
 Stat puer, et manibus lata canistra tenet.
 Inde, ubi ter fruges medios immisit in ignes,
 Porrigit incisos filia parva favos.
 Vina tenent alii; libantur singula flammis; 535
 Spectant, et linguis candida turba favent.
 Spargitur et cæso communis Terminus agno,
 Nec queritur, lactens cùm sibi porca datur.
 Conveniunt, celebrantque dapes vicinia simplex;
 Et cantant laudes, Termine sancte, tuas. 540
 Tu populos, urbesque, et regna ingentia finis;
 Omnis erit sine te litigiosus ager.
 Nulla tibi ambitio est; nullo corrumpere auro:
 Legitimâ servas credita rura fide.
 Si tu signâsses olim Thyreatida terram, 545

530. Ramos. The stakes by which the pile of wood was prevented from falling about. Pugnat. Strives.

532. Puer. Called Camillus, a boy of noble birth, whose parents should both be living, παῖς ἀμφιβαλῆς. The boy who attended the sacrifices with the Flamen Dialis was called Flaminius Camillus. It is supposed by some that Camillus was formerly synonymous with puer. Canistra. Osier baskets, qu. from canna. They contained whatever was necessary for the sacrifice—the knife, the molæ salsæ, and the chaplets. So Æschines, ἐνῆρκται μὲν τὰ κανῶ; 'canistrorum jam cæpta est circumventio; 'the sacred rites are now begun;' and Schol. Bekk. in loc. cit. Τὰ κανῶ ἐορτὴ παρ' Ἀθηναίοις, ἐν ἣ αἱ παρθένοι ἱερὰ τινὰ Δήαητρος ἐν κανῶις, ἥγουν ἐν κανισκοῖς, ἐβαστάζον ἐπὶ κεφαλῇς· ὁθεν κληφόροι κέκληνται. Οἶονεὶ εὐτρεπῆ ἦδε εἰσὶ τὰ κανίσκα τὰ πρὸς θυσίας. And Eurip. Iph. Aul. 1471. Κανῶ δ' ἐναρχίσθω τις; and 1508, Electr. 1142. Aristoph. Av. 851.

534. Porrigit. Offers. Incisos

favos. Sliced honeycomb. Filia parva, called camilla.

535. Libantur singula flammis. A portion of each was thrown into the fire.

536. Linguis favent. Abstain from words of ill omen. Candida. Either clad in white, or religious, reverent.

537. Cæso agno. So Horace, 'agna festis cæsa Terminalibus.' Communis. To those whose land was divided.

539. Celebrantque dapes. 'Throng the feast.' So Cicero, 'Domus mea quotidie celebratur.'

545. Thyreatida terram. Thyrea was a town in the Ager Cynurius, on the confines of Laconia and Argolis. The Lacedæmonians and Argives in consequence, each laid claim to it, and it was agreed to decide their claims by the sword. Three hundred men were chosen as champions on either side, and of all but three survived; of the Argives, Alcenus and Mathinus, and of the Lacedæmonians, Othryades. The two former left the field as triumphant, but the latter

Corpora non letho missa trecenta forent :
 Nec foret Othryades congestis tectus in armis :
 O quantum patriæ sanguinis ille dedit !
 Quid, nova cùm fierent Capitolia ? nempe Deorum
 Cuncta Jovi cessit turba locumque dedit. 550
 Terminus, ut veteres memorant, conventus in æde
 Restitit ; et magno cum Jove templa tenet.
 Nunc quoque, se supra ne quid nisi sidera cernat,
 Exiguum templi tecta foramen habent.
 Termine, post illud levitas tibi libera non est ; 555
 Quâ positus fueris in statione, mane.
 Nec tu vicino quicquam concede roganti,
 Ne videre hominem præposuisse Jovi.
 Et, seu vomeribus, seu tu pulsabere rastris,
 Clamato, ' Meus est hic ager, ille tuus.' 560
 Est via, quæ populum Laurentes ducit in agros, Quondam Dardanio regna petita duci.

had strength remaining to collect a sufficient quantity of spoils to raise a trophy, which he inscribed with his own blood to Jupiter Tropæuchus. Each party claiming the victory, hostilities were renewed, which terminated in the success of the Lacedæmonians, by whom their conquest was celebrated yearly with a festival, at which the presidents wore crowns—called Coronæ Thyreaticæ.

546. Trecenta. From the preceding note it must appear that the poet is mistaken.

547. Congestis armis. Alluding to the trophy.

548. O quantum. sc. By having caused a second engagement.

549. Quid, nova, &c. When Tarquinius Superbus was preparing to erect a temple to Jupiter on the Tarpeian rock, the rest of the deities consented, having been consulted by auguries, that their shrines, sacella, should be removed, exaugurari ; Terminus, however, when consulted,

conventus, refused, in æde restitit ; (Livy mentions that Juventas also declined being moved ; v. 54) and this was regarded by the Romans as an omen of the strength and stability of their empire.

553. Se supra. When the temple, alluded to above, was built, an aperture was left in the roof, over the statue of Terminus, whom it was supposed improper to confine within any limits ; hence the custom of sacrificing to this deity in the open air.

555. Post illud. Thenceforward ; from the time he had refused to give way to Jove. Levitas. Inconstancy. Libera non est. Is not permitted you.

561. Est via. The Via Laurentina, between the Via Hostiensis and Via Appia.

562. Dardanio duci. Æneas. See i. 469.

563. Illac, &c. The public sacrifice was formerly celebrated in honour of Terminus at the distance of six miles from Rome,

Gentibus est aliis tellus data limite certo ; 565
 Romanæ spatium est Urbis et orbis idem.

SEPT. KAL. MART. REGIFUGIUM.

Nunc dicenda mihi Regis fuga ; traxit ab illâ
 Sextus ab extremo nomina mense dies.
 Ultima Tarquinius Romanæ gentis habebat
 Regna ; vir injustus, fortis ad arma tamen. 570
 Ceperat hic alias, alias everterat urbes ;
 Et Gabios turpi fecerat arte suos.
 Namque trium minimus, proles manifesta Superbi,
 In medios hostes nocte silente venit.
 Nudârant gladios : ‘ Occidite, dixit, inermem.’ 575
 ‘ Hoc cupiant fratres, Tarquiniusque pater,
 ‘ Qui mea crudeli laceravit verbere terga.’
 Dicere ut hoc posset, verbera passus erat.
 Luna fuit ; spectant juvenem, gladiosque recondunt ;

whosesway extended subsequently over the habitable globe.

567. Nunc. On the vii. Kal. Mart. Feb. 23d. Regis fuga. The banishment of Tarquinius Superbus and his family from Rome, whence the festival was called Regifugium.

568. Sextus. Quintus. Neapol. which is given upon the authority of the ancient kalendar. Septimus extremo. Hamburg. See Fast. v. 671, upon which Forcel. ‘ Hic dies (xi. Kal. Jun.) festus rectius Fuga regis vocatur.’ According to the kalendar engraved by order of Augustus on tables of stone, this festival was celebrated on the vi. Kal. Mart. Feb. 24th.

570. Vir injustus. An usurper, having murdered his father-in-law, Servius Tullius, to obtain the throne. Fortis ad arma. He was, however, an able general, as appears from his successes over the Volsci, his capture of Suessa Pometia, their principal town, &c.

572. Gabios. A town of Latium, nearly mid-way between Rome to the west, and Præneste to the east. It was founded by two brothers from Sicily, Galactus and Bius. Turpi arte. The nature of the fraud is given in the text ; hence Juvenal ‘ Simplicibus Gabiis.’ 3. 192.

573. Minimus, sc. natu. Sextus was the youngest of the three brothers. Proles manifesta. His character proved him to be the offspring of Tarquinius Superbus.

574. Hostes, sc. Gabinos, with whom his father was at war.

575. Nudarant gladios. With the intention of putting him to death. Occidite, &c. So Sinon, ‘ Jamdudum sumite pœnas. Hoc Ithacus velit, et magno mercetur Atridæ.’ Virg. Æneid, ii. 104.

576. Fratres. Titus and Aruns.

578. Dicere ut hoc, &c. He had submitted to be scourged in the public forum at Rome, that he might have the stripes to show in proof of his veracity at Gabii.

579. Luna. Moonlight.

- Tergaque deductâ veste notata vident. 580
 Flent quoque, et, ut secum tueatur bella, precantur.
 Callidus ignaris amuit ille viris.
 Jamque potens, misso genitorem appellat amico,
 Prodendi Gabios quod sibi monstret iter.
 Hortus odoratis suberat cultissimus herbis, 585
 Sectus humum rivo lenè sonantis aquæ.
 Illic Tarquinius mandata latentia nati
 Accipit; et virgâ lilia summa metit.
 Nuncius ut rediit, decussaque lilia dixit;
 Filius, 'Agnosco jussa parentis,' ait. 590
 Nec mora; principibus cæsis ex urbe Gabinâ,
 Traduntur ducibus mœnia nuda suis.
 Ecce, nefas visu, mediis altaribus anguis

583. Jamque potens. He ingratified himself easily, so as to secure the confidence of the unsuspecting Gabini, and finally to be placed at the head of their state. 'Dux ad ultimum belli legitur; et in tanto caritate esse capit, ut non pater Tarquinius potentior Romæ quam filius Gabiis esset.' Liv.

585. Suberat. Was at hand.

586. Sectus humum, i. e. quoad humum. Having its soil divided by a gentle rill of purling water.

587. Mandata latentia. The secret instructions.

588. Lilia. According to Livy and Dionysius, Tarquin struck off the heads of the tallest poppies; 'Ibi inambulans tacitus, summa papaverum capita dicitur baculo decussisse.' Liv. Thrasybulus of Miletus is said to have made an equally significant reply to a messenger sent him by Periander the tyrant of Corinth, to inquire how his reign might be best made durable. The messenger was taken to a corn field, where Thrasybulus cut off the heads of the tallest stalks. This was not thrown away upon Periander either, for he immediately destroyed the noblest and wealthiest of his subjects.

Hence it may be easily seen what branch of the state is most obnoxious to the cravings of a tyrant. High birth, and its proper twin, high principle, if men knew better, are obstacles insurmountable to heartless and profligate ambition. See infr. 593-4.

591. Principibus cæsis. 'Primores civitatis, criminando alios apud populum, alios sua ipsos invidia opportunos interemit,' &c. Liv.

592. Traduntur. 'Orba consilio auxilioque, Gabina res regi Romano sine ulla dimicatione in manum traditur.' Id.

593. Ecce, &c. Upon the capture of Gabii, Tarquin made peace with the Volsci, renewed his league with the Tuscans, and turned his attention to improving the city of Rome; while engaged in this design, the portent appeared as described in the text. There were three remarkable things connected with this portent, as mentioned by the poet, the issuing of a snake from amongst the altars, its devouring the entrails, and the extinguishing of the fires. Livy mentions merely that the snake came out of a wooden pillar, belonging to the ancient Capitol probably, and proceeded towards the palace.

595. Consulitur Phœbus. Titus and Aruns, their brother having been designedly left behind, were sent to Delphi to consult the oracle upon this portent, on which occasion they asked also who was to succeed their father as king. To this latter query, to which the poet does not allude, was given the answer in the text. ‘Perfectis patris mandatis, cupido incepit animos Juvenum sciscitandi, ad quem eorum regnum Romanum esset venturum.’ Liv. Sors. The response.

596. Princeps. First.

597. Quisque. According to Dionysius, the two youths agreed to conceal the oracle from their brother, and that, having both kissed their parent at the same time, they should reign conjointly. Livy, however, states that they left it to chance which should so salute her first. Properata. In allusion to the haste with which they returned.

598. Credula turba. Titus and Aruns, who misinterpreted the oracle, whence credula, and non intellecto Deo.

599. Brutus. His father, M.

Junius, and elder brother, were both put to death by Tarquin, who coveted their wealth ; in order to escape a similar fate, L. J. Brutus (see infr. 723) counterfeited idiocy, and was retained at the court of Tarquin for the amusement of his sons. ‘Ex industria factus ad imitationem stultitiæ, quum se suaque prædæ esse regi sineret, Bruti quoque laud abnuvit cognomen ; ut sab ejus obtentu cognominis liberator ille populi Romani tempora opperiretur sua.’ Liv.

601. Pronus. Prostrate. Matri Terræ. ‘Scilicet quod ea communis mater omnium mortalium esset.’ Liv.

602. Offenso pede. sc. Having stumbled.

603. Ardea. A town of Latium, twenty-three miles distant from Rome, founded by Danaë, daughter of Acrisius ; Virg. Æneid, vii. 409, et seq. so called either from an augury taken from a heron, ardea, Hygin. or from the excessive heat of the country, ardor, Martial. It was besieged by Tarquin, on the pretence that it had received some Roman exiles, and was conspiring to effect their return.

607. Juvenes. So Heins. The Delphin edition reads juvenis, and refers it to Sextus Tarquinius, which, from what follows, may be considered the more correct.

608. Atque illis. Aeq. ex illis, sc. sociis. Al. Ex illis sc. dapibus, i. e. post canam, Delph.

609. Difficilis. So called from the strenuous opposition made by the Ardeates, ‘difficilis fores,’ Propert. Eleg. 1. 6.

611. Ecquid, &c. Whether does the nuptial bed abide in its fidelity ? torus socialis, is used for tori sociæ. In officio, lit. in the discharge of its duty. Tr. Are our wives faithful ?

613. Studiis. By their zeal in the commendation of their respective wives.

615. Collatia. A town of the Sabines, situated on an eminence ‘Collatinas montibus arces,’ Virg. Æneid, vi. 744, four or five miles distant from Rome to the east. So called ‘quod ibi opes aliarum civitatum fuerint collatæ,’ Varr. Tarquinius Collatinus was so named from his father Tiberius having been appointed governor of Collatia after its capture by his uncle Tarquinius Superbus. The epithet clarum alludes most probably to the glory subsequently attached to the name of Collatinus, when he and L. J. Brutus were appointed the first consuls at Rome.

616. Rebus. ‘Quin—conscendimus equos, invisimusque præsentibus nostrarum ingenia ? Id cuique spectatissimum sit, quod necopinato viri adventu occurrerit oculis,’ Liv.

618. Frænis impediuntur. Are bridled.

619. Pertulerant dominos. They had conveyed their masters to the place of destination. Perfero. ‘Usque ad locum destinatum, vel usque ad finem constitutum fero,’ Forcel.

620. In fore, sc. ad fores. Custos nullus. A proof of the carelessness of those within.

621. Nulum regis. The daughter-in-law of Tarq. Superb. wife of Sextus T. Fuis coronis. The wreaths with which her hair was braided having fallen down, from the effects of her revels, upon her bosom.

622. Pervigilare. Devoting the whole night to her vigils. Posito mero. With wine at hand.

623. Cito. Rapid ; doubtless from their anxiety. Lucretia. Wife of Collatinus, and daughter of Spurius Lucretius Tricipitinus, a noble citizen of Rome. Nebat, &c. The simplicity with which the poet has described the mid-night occupations of Lucretia, is in perfect keeping with the character which they are intended to illustrate and commend.

624. Calathi. Work-basket.

625. Data pensa trahebant. Were carding the wool assigned them. Pensum, τὸ σταθμηθὲν, from pendo, means a certain weight of wool given out to be dressed, &c. within a stated time. Forcel.

626. Tenui sono. In a subdued or gentle tone.

‘ Her voice was ever soft, Gentle, and low ; an excellent thing in woman.’

Shakespeare.

628. Nostrâ. Vestra. Maz. Zulich. Lacerna. A kind of cloak or great-coat, worn over the toga or tunic, open in front, and fastened with clasps or buckles, fibulae. Æneid, vi. 118, 329. It was worn at first by the military only, Paterc. ii. 80, whence Lucretia is stated in the text to be engaged in making one for her husband. It is identified by Neapolis, in his comments on this passage, with the penula, a species of cloak resembling the lacerna, but shorter and straighter, which was also peculiar to the army. With a like thoughtfulness and affection, Andromache devoted her time to Hector in his absence.

Iliad, xxii. 510, et seq.

629. Nam plura. Alluding to the propensity, peculiar to the class she was addressing, for acquiring news.

631. Postmodo victa cades. &c. Heinsius suspects this reading, and would substitute, Dummodo victa cadas, melioribus Ardea resta, as if it were a wish on the part of Lucretia ; Burmann, however, adopts the reading in the text, no doubt correctly, and explains the passage, ‘ Hereafter conquered, you shall fall ; perversely, Ardea, you withstand, restas, more able adversaries.’ So Forcellinus too in voc. resto.

633. Temerarius ille. So Andromache, Διμόνι φέρει σε τὸ σὸν μένος. Iliad, vi.

637. Intentaque fila remittit. ‘At subitus calor ossa reliquit. Excussi manibus radii, revolutaque pensa.’ Virg. Æneid, ix. 475.

640. Et facies, &c. And her countenance was worthy of, and suited to her character.

643. Furiatos, Furiales. Heins.

645. Niveusque color. ‘The silent war of lilies and of roses.’ Shaksp. Flarique capilli. ‘Her hair, like golden threads, play’d with her breath.’ Id.

646. Nullâ factus, &c. Her undorned beauty.

648. Quoque minor, &c. ‘Haply that name of chaste, unhappily set, This bateless edge on his keen appetite.’ Shaksp.

649. Lucis prænuncius ales. The bird, the harbinger of day.

653. Sic sedit. Such were the reflections of Sextus Tarquinius on his return to the camp at Ar-

dea. Stamina. The warp, chain, or stamen of a web, Forcel. derived a stando, because the ancients stood when they wove, placing the web perpendicularly, whence radio stantis (i.e. pendentis) percurrrens stamina telæ, Ovid. Metam. iv. 275, and wrought upwards, in altitudinem, vel sursum versum, Festus. which method was abandoned, however, by the linen weavers, linteones, and in weaving the tunica recta, or regilla. Plin. viii. 48, s. 74.

657. Ut solet, &c. As the sea is wont to be calmed after a great storm, but still there is a heavy roll, the effect of the wind that has ceased to blow. This simile is highly expressive; Sextus had no longer the object before him, but still he was distracted with the iniquitous passion which its present beauty had inspired.

- Sed tamen à vento, qui fuit, unda tumet :

 Comiter excipitur ; sanguine junctus erat. 670
 Quantum animis erroris inest ! parat inscia rerum
 Infelix epulas hostibus illa suis.
 Functus erat dapibus ; poscunt sua tempora somni :
 Nox erat, et totâ lumina nulla domo.

 Et venit in Thalamos, nupta pudica, tuos.
 Utque torum pressit, ' Ferrum, Lucretia, mecum est ;
 ' Natus,' ait, ' regis, Tarquiniusque loquor.'
 Illa nihil ; neque enim vocem viresque loquendi,
 Aut aliquid toto pectore mentis habet ; 680
 Sed tremit, ut quondam stabulis deprensa relictis,
 Parva sub infesto cùm jacet agna lupo.
 Quid faciat ? pugnet ? vincetur fœmina pugnâ ;

 Nunc primùm externâ pectora tacta manu.

661. Injusti. Incesti. Al.

664. Viderit. Let Fortune or the deity look to it, which of two may aid the bold. ' So from himself impiety hath wrought, That for his prey to pray he doth begin, As if the heaven should countenance his sin.' &c. Shaksp.

667. Æratâ. Fortified with brass, or it may mean simply, strong, impenetrable. Forcel.

670. Comiter. So Dionysius ;
 Ἐξέινξεν αὐτὸν ὡς συγγενῇ τοῦ ἀνδρός
 πολλὰ προθυμία τε καὶ φιλοφροσύνη.
Sanguine junctus erat. Sextus was the cousin of Collatinus.

675. Auratum. Ornamented with gold.

677. Utque torum pressit. ' Sinistraqe manu mulieris pectore oppresso, Tace, Lucretia, inquit, Sextus Tarquinius sum, ferrum in manu est ; morieris si emiseris vocem.' Liv.

682. Parva sub, &c. ' The wolf hath seized his prey, the poor lamb cries.' Shaksp.

686. Externâ pectora tacta manu. ' Save of their lord no bearing yoke they knew, And him by oath they truly honoured.' Id.

Non oculos adeò sustulit illa suos.

‘ Hoc quoque Tarquinio debebimus ? eloquar,’ inquit,

689. Pro crimine. For a crime with which she was to be falsely charged.

692. Succubuit famæ. The dread of her honour being impeached, and her memory disgraced, when she should be no longer alive to vindicate either, placed her at last in the disposal of the destroyer of her peace. It is much to be regretted that the poet was not in every instance guided by the delicacy and taste which so eminently distinguish his version of this affecting history ; nothing can be more beautiful, or touchingly simple, than the above line, which contains its unhappy result.

694. Heu quanto, &c. How dear has one night cost your kingdom.

699. Utque vident habitum. In allusion to her appearing as described, supr. 695.

‘ But now the mindful messenger comes back,
Brings home his lord and other company ;
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black :
And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream’d, like rainbows in the sky.’

Shaksp.

703. Orant indicet. Sc. ut indicet.

‘ Unmask, dear dear, this moody business
And tell thy grief that we may give redress.’

Id.

704. Cæco. Because they knew not the cause of her affliction.

705. Ter conata loqui ter destitit.

‘ Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow fire,
Ere once she can discharge one word of woe.

Id.

707. Hoc quoque. In addition to what she had already suffered,

‘Eloquar infelix dedecus ipsa meum :’
 Quæque potest, narrat. Restabant ultima : flevit ;
 Et matronales erubuere genæ. 710
 Dant veniam facto genitor conjuxque coacto.
 ‘Quam,’ dixit, ‘veniam vos datis, ipsa nego.’
 Nec mora, celato figit sua pectora ferro ;
 Et cadit in patrios sanguinolenta pedes.
 Tunc quoque, jam moriens, ne non procumbat honeste, 715
 Respicit ; hæc etiam cura cadentis erat.
 Ecce super corpus, communia damna gementes,
 Obliti decoris virque paterque jacent.
 Brutus adest ; tandemque animo sua nomina fallit ;
 Fixaque semanimi corpore tela rapit. 720

she was further obliged to be the herald of her own disgrace.

711. Dant veniam. So Livy ; ‘Consolantur ægram animi, aver-tendo noxam a coacta in auctorem delicti : mentem peccare, non corpus et unde consilium abfuerit, culpam abesse.’

‘With this they all at once began to say,
 Her body’s stain her mind untainted clears ;
 While with a joyless smile she turns away
 The face, that map, which deep impression bears
 Of hard misfortune, carv’d in it with tears.’

‘No, no,’ saith she, ‘no dame hereafter living,
 By my excuse shall claim excuses giving.’

Shaksp.

715. Ne non procumbat honeste.
 So Polyxena ;—ἡ δὲ, καὶ θνήσκουσα
ἑμῶς Πολλὴν πρόνοιαν ἔιχεν εὐσχή- μονως περὶν. Eurip. Hec.

718. Obliti decoris. Hurried to extremes by the intensity of their grief. Virque paterque.

‘Then son and father weep with equal strife,
 Who should weep most for daughter or for wife.’

Id.

719. Animo sua nomina fallit.
 The name Brutus is said to have been given him from his supposed idiocy. On this occasion he shows his real character, and how little he deserved the appellation.

‘He with the Romans was esteemed so,
 As silly, jeering idiots are with kings,
 For sporting words, and uttering foolish things.’

But now he throws that shallow habit
 by,

Wherein deep policy did him disguise ;
 And armed his long hid wits advisedly,
 To check the tears in Collatinus’ eyes.’

720. Fixaque semanimi.

‘And from the purple fountain Brutus drew

The murderous knife, and as it left the place,

Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase.’

‘Now, by the Capitol that we adore,
 And by this chaste blood so unjustly
 stain’d,

By heaven’s fair sun, that breeds the fat
 earth’s store,

By all our country’s rights in Rome main-tain’d,

And by chaste Lucrece’ soul that late complain’d

Stillantemque tenens generoso sanguine cultrum,
 Edidit impavidos ore minante sonos :
 ‘ Per tibi ego hunc juro fortem castumque cruorem,
 ‘ Perque tuos Manes, qui mihi numen erunt ;
 ‘ Tarquinius pœnas profugâ cum stirpe daturum : 725
 ‘ Jam satis est virtus dissimulata diu.’
 Illa jacens ad verba oculos sine lumine movit ;
 Visaque concussâ dicta probare comâ.
 Fertur in exequias animi matrona virilis :
 Et secum lachrymas, invidiamque trahit. 730
 Vulnus inane patet. Brutus clamore Quirites
 Concitat, et regis facta nefanda refert.
 Tarquinius cum prole fugit. Capit annua Consul
 Jura : dies regnis illa suprema fuit.

HIRUNDINUM ADVENTUS.

FALLIMUR ? an veris prænuncia venit hirundo, 735
 Et metuit, nequâ versa recurrat hiems ?
 Sæpe tamen, Progne, nimium properâsse quereris ;
 Virque tuo Tereus frigore lætus erit.

Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
 We will revenge the death of this true wife.’

Id

727. Oculos sine lumine. ‘ Her lack-lustre eyes.’

728. Concussâ comâ. By bowing her head.

729. Fertur in exequias. ‘ Ela-tum domo Lucretiæ corpus in forum deferunt, concientque miraculo, ut fit, rei novæ atque indig-nitate homines.’ Liv.

730. Lachrymas, invidiamque.
 Tears and indignation.

732. Regis. ‘ Addita superbia ipsius regis, miseriæque et labo-res plebis, in fossas cloacasque exhauriendas demersæ.’ Liv.

733. Prole. Titus and Aruns followed their father to Cære in Etruria; Sextus returned, with the intention of resuming his authority, to Gabii, where he was put to death by the avengers of the many victims sacrificed to his treachery and cruelty. Capit

annua Consul jura. Upon the expulsion of the kings, A. U. 244, two supreme magistrates called by the Greeks ‘ΤΡΙΑΤΟΙ, were annually created, with an equal degree of power and authority, in order that they might be a check upon each other, and not misconduct themselves from the too long continuance of their command.
 Brutus and Collatinus were the first consuls after the extinction of regal power.

735. An veris, &c. Or has the swallow come, the herald of the spring ?

736. Versa. Lest winter changed from the temperature of spring, or, altered from its due course,
 should return again, recurrat.

737. Progne. See supr. n. 511.
Nimium properasse. To have made too great haste ; the season being as yet too cold.

738. Lætus erit. On account of his old enmity to Progne.

TERT. KAL. MART. EQUIRIA IN CAMPO MARTIO.

JAMQUE duæ restant noctes de mense secundo,
 Marsque citos junctis curribus urget equos ; 740
 Ex vero positum permansit Equiria nomen ;
 Quæ Deus in Campo prospicit ipse suo.
 Jure venis, Gradive : locum tua tempora poscunt :
 Signatusque tuo nomine mensis adest.
 Venimus in portum, libro cum mense peracto : 745
 Naviget hinc aliâ jam mihi linter aquâ.

739. Jamque duæ. On the III. Kal. Mart. was the celebration of the Equiria, or chariot races, ab equorum cursu, ordained by Romulus, in honour of his reputed father Mars. They were held in the Campus Martius, or in case of its being flooded, which sometimes occurred, in a part of Mons Cælius, called by Catullus, Campus minor, Carm. 55. The Equiria were repeated, III. Id. Mart. See Fast. iii. 513.

740. Junctis curribus. Each race being contested by a number of chariots.

742. Suo. Sc. Martis.

743. Jure venis Gradive. Because the poet is going to treat of the month called after him. Mars was called Gradivus, a gradiendo in bella, Fest. or from Gr. ῥαδαίνειν, quia hastam vibrat ; or from gramen, because he is said to have been produced from a flower by the aid of Flora ; see Fast. v. 229, whence the corona graminea was so highly prized as a military honour. Servius, in Æneid. i. 296, says that Mars, when peaceable, was called Quirinus, but when the contrary, Gradivus, in consequence of which, he had two temples, one within the city, as its guardian in peace, the other without, on the Appian way, as its defence in war.

LIBER III.

BELLICE, depositis clypeo paulisper et hasta,
Mars, ades, et nitidas casside solve comas.
Forsitan ipse roges, quid sit cum Marte poëtæ.
A te, qui canitur, nomina, mensis habet,
Ipse vides manibus peragi fera bella Minervæ. 6
Num minus, ingenuis artibus illa vacat?
Palladis exemplo ponendæ tempora sume

Tum quoque inermis eras, cum te Romana sacerdos
Cepit, ut huic Urbi semina digna dares. 10
Illa Vestalis, quid enim vetat inde moveri?
Sacra lavaturas mane petebat aquas.

1. Bellice. This month, consecrated to Mars, the third of the Julian year, was the first in that ordained by Romulus. On the first day of March, new fires were kindled upon the altars of Vesta, new branches of laurel suspended in the palaces, and houses of the priests, &c. Clypeo. From Gr. γλύφω, sculpo, because of the figures and emblems which were usually carved upon them. The clypeus differed from the parma, in the material of which it was composed, the former having been made of brass, the latter of leather; and also from the scutum which was made of wood. They are used indiscriminately by the poets.

2. Et nitidas casside solve comas.

Free from the casque your glossy hair. The poet invokes Mars, having laid aside his armour, to yield him his aid and attention.

5. Ipsc vides. The poet assigns as a reason why he should be allowed to discuss his present subject, the leisure which Minerva was enabled to devote to the liberal arts, although her occupations were for the most part professedly warlike.

9. Romana. Trojana. Heins.

10. Cepit, &c. Captivated you, so that you granted a suitable origin to this city.

11. Inde moveri. To set out from thence.

12. Sacra. The vessels used at the sacrifices; which were of various kinds, as the acerra or thuribulum, a censer for burning incense ; simpulum or simpuvium, guttus, capis, patera. cups used in libations ; ollæ, pots ; tripodes, tripods, &c. Aquas. The river Numicius, sacred to Vesta.

13. Tramite. Cross-path ; from transmeare.

14. Fictilis urna, &c. 'The earthen pitcher is set down from the top of her head. Wearied she sunk upon the ground, welcomed the breeze to her uncovered breast, and re-arranged her disordered tresses. While she is reclining, the shady willows, and warbling birds, with the soft murmur of the stream, induced repose. A gentle slumber steals insensibly on her unresisting eyes, and her powerless hand fails to support her head.'

24. Arbore nixa. Supported by a tree.

25. Imagine somni. In a dream.

27. Ignibus Iliacis. At the Trojan fires : sc. of Vesta, brought away from Troy by Æneas, Virg. Æneid, ii. 717.

28. Lanea vitta. The Vestal virgins wore round their heads fillets, infulæ, στίμματα, Dionys. ii. 67, viii. 69, and ribbons or bands, vittæ. Hence the Vestalis Maxima is called Vittata Sacerdos, Lucan. i. 597, and simply Vittata, Juvenal, iv. 10. The head dress which they wore at the sacrifices was called suffibulum, from fibula, because fastened with clasps. This dream was prophetic of what subsequently occurred when the insignia of her office were removed, in consequence of the forfeiture of her vows as a Vestal virgin. So Dionysius, speaking of Oppia or Opimia, convicted of a similar offence : Αὐτὴν μὲν τῆς κορυφῆς ἀφελόμενοι τὰ στίμματα, καὶ πομπέουσι δι' ἀγορᾶς, ἐντὸς τείχους ζῶσαν κατώρυζαν. Several MSS. read Laurea vitta.

29. Duæ palmæ. As the palm was the emblem of victory, 'quos Elea domum reducit palma cælestes ;' Horat. Od. iv. 2, 17, sometimes the victor himself, 'tertia palma Diore,' Virg. Æn. v. 330 ; it was an appropriate symbol of the future glory of her offspring.

30. Major. Romulus.

32. Nova coma. With its wondrous foliage.

33. Patruus. Amulius.

34. Terreor, &c. I am awed by the warning, and my heart palpitates with fear.

35. Picus. Gr. δρυκολάπτης, a woodpecker. Pliny says that this bird was so called from Picus, father of Faunus, who was changed into a woodpecker by Circe, whose advances he contemned. Others derive the name from πίκω, tundo. According to Plutarch, the twins Romulus and Remus were nourished both by a wolf and a woodpecker, the former having suckled them, and the latter supplied them with food. See infr. 53, 54. The woodpecker was sacred to Mars, whence Martia. Gemino pro stipite. For the two trees.

36. Tuta, &c. By their means either tree was preserved.

41. Quo minus, &c. Ere the year should close, its course having been accomplished, two signs, (of the Zodiac, i. e. two months,) were remaining for the resplendent god, sc. to enter. A periphrasis for ten months. Emeritis. See i. 601.

43. Vestæ simulacra. The poet, Fast. vi. 277, professes to have erred in ascribing statues or effigies to Vesta, which did not exist. The goddess was worshipped, no doubt, under the image of the eternal fire, but it is equally true that she was likewise worshipped under visible forms. Posidonius, (in Heroibus et Dæmonibus,) mentions that Vesta was the inventor of houses, and, in consequence, paintings were made of her, and hung up in every dwelling to protect it, and preserve its inhabitants. In the mythology of Natalis Comes, (Hecat. Miles. in Genealog.) Vesta is described as a female, seated, and wearing a crown, with various plants around her, and animals of every kind doing her homage. It is not unlikely that as there were two Vestas, see i. 478, the statues were intended to represent the Vesta who was the same with Terra or the earth, and that the other, who was the representative of another element, fire, was worshipped under that semblance. In describing the occurrence in the text, the poet does not speak

53. Larentia. Laurentia. Al. and 55, Laurentalia.

55. Larentalia. A festival in honour of Larentia, the wife of Faustulus, celebrated in December.

56. Acceptus Geniis. On the xvi. Kal. Januar. Decem. 17th, the Saturnalia, or festival in honour of Saturn, was held, which was the most distinguished of the whole year. All ranks engaged in the mirth and festivities; friends interchanged valuable presents, and masters were brought on a level with their slaves; hence acceptus geniis. The Genius was a dæmon or tutelary god, supposed to take charge of every individual from his birth, during the whole period of his life; 'Scit genius, natale comes qui temperat astrum, Naturæ deus humanæ mortalis in unum—Quodque caput,' Horat. Ep. ii. 2, 187; propitiated by offerings; 'Floribus et vino genium.' Id. Ep. ii. 1, 143. 'Funde merum genio.' Pers. 2, 3.

57. Martia proles. Romulus and Remus.

59. Magistris. Ministris. Neap.

60. Iliadæ. Sons of Ilia. Jura petita dabant, Were dispensing the required justice.

68. Non tamen. Because his death was the result.

71. Arbiter armorum. sc. Mars.

73. A te principium, &c. Because, as has been already observed, the year of Romulus began with March.

75. De patrio nomine. sc. Mars, from whom March was called.

77. Omnes. sc. Deos. Priores. The Latins, who were familiar with the worship of Mars before the time of Romulus.

78. Hoc dederat, &c. The warlike people had made this, i. e. the worship of Mars, the object of their zealous attention. Dederant. Al. Dederit. Heins.

79. Pallada. Minerva, so called from πάλλω, quia vibrat hastam. According to Festus, she received this name either from Pallas, a giant ; Cic. de Nat. Deor. iii. 23, whom she slew for having offered her violence, or because she was born in Pallas, a marshy district of Africa. Cecropidæ. The Athenians, so called from Cecrops, the most ancient sovereign of Athens. He reigned for fifty years, four centuries before the destruction of Troy. He is said to have been the son of Vulcan and Terra ; Hygin. fab. 48, and 158. He was believed by the Athenians to have considerably enlarged their city, founded by Pallas, who was their tutelary deity. Minoïa Creta. Crete, now Candia, i. e. a citadel, is one of the larger islands in the Mediterranean sea. The name is of Phœnician origin, signifying skilful bowmen, the bow and arrows having been the constant arms of the Cretans. It was formerly celebrated for its hundred cities, whence ἑκατόμπολις ; for Mount Ida, where was shown the cradle and the sepulchre of Jova ; the amours of Ariadne, Europa, Paαἰφῆα, &c.; called Minoia, from Minos, son of Jupiter and Europa, its ancient king, and an eminent legislator. According to some its original name was Aëria, after which it was called Crete, from a nymph of that name. Diana was worshipped there with great solemnity, upon Mount Dicte, whence she is called Dictynna.

80. Tellus Hypsipylea. Lemnos, an island in the Ægean Sea, so called from Hypsipyle, daughter of Thoas, king of Lemnos. When all the women in the island conspired to put the men to death to secure their own independence, she preserved her father, and had him conveyed by night to Chios. The Argonauts captured Lemnos on their way to Colchis, and Hypsipylea bore two sons, Thoas and Eunens, to their leader Jason. Lemnos, now Stalimene, was sacred to Vulcan, who was flung from heaven, by his mother Juno, in disgust at his deformity, or according to others, by his father Jupiter, and having continued to descend for a whole day, lighted on Lemnos at sunset; Πᾶν δ' ἡμᾶρ φερόμεν, αἶα δ' ἡελίῳ καταδύντι Κάππιον ἐν Ἀρμῶ. Hom. Some say that he fell upon Hephestias, a mountain in the island, by which they account for the blackness and barrenness of its summit, and its name.

81. Junonem Sparte, &c. Sparta, now Misitrà or Misistrà, a city of Peloponnesus in Laconia, founded by Spartus, the grandson of Inachus. Mycenæ. A town of Peloponnesus in Argos, built by Lacedæmon the son of Semele; according to others, by Perseus, the son of Danaë, with the assistance of the Cyclops; Senec. in Herc. Furens. 997; and so called after the nymph Mycena. It was the abode of Pelops, whence Pelopeïades, from whose son, Thyestes, it was also called Thyestear. Juno was worshipped at Sparta, (of which Sparte is the Greek form,) with particular respect.

82. Pinigerum Fauni. Faunus is represented as wearing a crown of pine. He was one of the Dii Indigetes of the Arcadians. Mænalis ora. Arcadia. See i. 570.

85. Peregrinos Fastos. The Fasti of the other Italian states.

87. Tertius Albanis. March was the third month with the Albans, the fifth with the Falisci; Fast. i. 84, &c.

88. Hernica terra. The Hernici were a people of Latium, between the Æqui and Volsci.

89. Inter Aricinos, &c. There is an agreement in reckoning, or in the order of the months, between the Aricini, the Albani, sc. Albana mania, and the Tusculani, sc. factag. Teleg. man. that is, March is the third month with each. Aricia was a town in Latium. Tusculum was built upon a high hill, twelve miles distant from Rome, by Telegonus the son of Ulysses and Circe.

91. Quintum. The Laurentes made March the fifth month, the Æquicoli, the tenth. The Æqui and Æquicoli inhabited between the Marsi and the Sabines, bordering on both. Asper. 'Horrida præcipue cui gens, assuetaque multo Venatu nemorum, duris Æquicola glebis.' Virg.

92. A tribus hunc primum. The first month after three, a tribus, i. e. the fourth month. Turba Curensis. The Sabines. Some MSS. read Ferensis, which is interpreted of the Ferentini, who inhabited the town Ferentum, placed by Strabo on the Via Latina. Others read Forensis, by which Scaliger would understand the inhabitants of Foruli, a town of the Sabines; while some explain it of 'Forum populi,' a town on the Alban Mount, whose inhabitants were called Foropopulientes; Plin. iii. c. 5. The reading in the text, however, is the most approved, and is fully borne out by the two succeeding lines.

93. Peligne. The Peligni were a people of Italy, in Aprutium, now Abruzzo. According to Festus, they were a people of Illyria. They were of a very warlike character, whence miles. 'Marsa manus, Peligna cohors, festina virum vis.' Enn. apud. Charis. iv.

94. Genti utrique. The Peligni and Sabines, called proavi, as being the stock from which the former derived their descent. Quartus deus. i. e. March is the fourth month.

95. Ordine saltem. As none of the preceding states were deficient in the worship of Mars, Romulus could only surpass them by placing the month called after his reputed sire at the head of the year. Fast. i. 39.

97. Kalendas. sc. Menses.

99. Nondum tradideras, &c. Before Greece was brought under the authority of Rome. 'In the history of those kingdoms, (the Grecian and Egyptian) the most remarkable event is their conquest by the Romans, who gradually seized all the western spoils of the empire of Alexander, comprehended between the Euphrates and the Hadriatic sea, and successively reduced them into the form of provinces. Greece, which came to be distinguished by the name of Achaia, imparted its literature, its arts, and its vices to Italy.' GILLIES' GREECE. Compare Horat. Ep. ii. 1, 156. 'Græcia capta ferum victorem cepit, et artes Intulit agresti Latio.'

100. Facundum, sed male forte genus. 'The sloth and servility of Asia gradually crept into Greece.' — Reluctantly compelled to submit to a master, they lost that elevation of character, and that enthusiasm of valour, which had been produced by freedom, nourished by victory, and confirmed by the just sense of national pre-eminence.' GILLIES' IBID.

101. Romanam artem. Opposed to victas artes ; and disertus erat, to facundum genus, supr. So Virgil, 'Excudent alii spirantia mollius æra : Credo equidem, vivos ducunt de marmore vultus : Orabunt causas melius, cœlique meatus Describent radio, et surgentia sidera dicent, Tu regere imperio,' &c.

103. Hyadas, &c. See Fast. ii. 372. The poet proceeds to prove how little conversant the ancient Romans were with any science except that of war, and how unobservant of those constellations which were afterwards their guides in the division of the seasons ; as the Hyades were the harbingers of winter, the Pleiades of spring, &c. Several MSS. read Pliadas.

104. Sub axe. May either mean simply in the open air, under the canopy of heaven, Forcel. or the poet may be understood to take polos, not in the usual sense of the extremities of the earth's axis, but as a sort of hinges on which either extremity of the axis turned.

105. Duas Arctos. The Ursa Major and Ursa Minor ; for the former, called Helice, from Gr. ελισσω, volvo, from its revolving round the pole, see Fast. ii. N. 157. Cynosura, the Ursa Minor, was one of the nymphs who nursed Jupiter on Mount Ida, in Crete, and was raised to the stars together with her sisters, for their deserts. Cynosura is derived from κύων, canis, and οὐρά, cauda, because the stars behind the bear are so situated, as to be thought to resemble the tail of a dog ; Cic. in Arat. ii. de Nat. Deor. The merchants of Sidon, a city of Phœnicia, in Syria, directed their navigation by the Ursa Minor, the Greeks by the Ursa Major.

107. Signaque. Of the zodiac. Longo anno. The solar year, during which the sun, frater, remains for a month in each of the twelve signs, through which, severally, the moon passes in the space of one month.

108. Sororis. sc. Lunæ.

110. Sidera. Because they had not yet been made subservient for the distinction of times and seasons, &c.

— Constabat, &c. Although unobservant of the celestial bodies, they were still convinced of the existence of the gods. The poet obviously intends to guard against an inference, which might be deduced from what he had previously stated, viz. that the ancient Romans were altogether unconcerned upon the points of religious worship, which, it is well known, they were not. There does not seem to be any occasion for the proposed emendations of this passage, as it stands in the text; Constabat sed tamen esse Deo. Petav. Per annos Sidera constabat sed tamen esse suos. Al. Constabat sed tamen esse diu. Heins.

111. Non illi, &c. They regarded not the signs which move across the sky. Sed sua. sc. signa, Standards. Quæ magnum perdere crimen. To lose or abandon the standard was looked upon as highly dishonorable, particularly in the standard-bearer, and sometimes as a capital offence, Liv. ii. 59; hence to animate the soldiers the standards were sometimes thrown into the midst of the enemy. Liv. iii. 70, vi. 8, xxv. 14, xxvi. 5.

113. De fœno. The first army which Romulus contrived to organise, consisting of shepherds, &c. he divided into companies of one hundred each, and assigned to every century a standard, manipulus, a manum implendo, a bundle of hay tied to the top of a pole. Aurel. Victor. de orig. pop. Rom. c. 22. By this, subsequently, was understood the troop itself. Sed erat, &c. In former times this primitive ensign obtained the reverence and respect which was afterwards evinced towards the Aquila.

114. Aquilas. The omens taken from the eagles' flight were considered the most auspicious by the Romans, whence the common standard of a legion was a silver eagle, with expanded wings, on the top of a spear, sometimes with a thunderbolt in its claws. Before the time of Marius, various animals were represented by the Roman standards, afterwards the Aquila generally prevailed. Tuas. Of Germanicus.

115. Pertica. Qu. pertiga, from pertingo. A pole to which the trusses of hay were attached. Supr. 113.

116. Manipularis. sc. A Maniplo.

117. Ratione carentes. Deficient in calculation.

118. Mensibus egerunt, &c. They caused the lustra to come short by ten months; because a lustrum contained generally a space of five years; and as each year, at the time alluded to in the text, consisted of only ten months, so there were but fifty months in a lustrum which ought to have contained sixty, had the year contained the proper proportion of months, twelve, which were subsequently assigned to it. With a view to the valuation of property and a due settlement of the public revenue, Servius Tullius instituted a census, or assessment, which was held Annus erat, decimum cum Luna repleverat orbem.

Hic numerus magno tunc in honore fuit.

120

Seu quia tot digiti, per quos numerare solemus ;

Seu quia bis quino femina mense parit ;

Seu quod adusque decem numero crescente venit ;

125

at the end of every five years, first by the kings, then by the consuls, but after the year 310, by the censors, the magistrates appointed distinctly for that purpose. After the census was concluded, an expiatory, or purifying sacrifice, sacrificium lustrale, was offered, consisting of a sow, a sheep, and a bull, which were carried round the whole assembly, and then slain ; and so the people were said to be cleansed, lustrari. This sacrifice was called Suove-taurilia or Solitaurilia, and he who performed it was said condere lustrum, so called a luendo, i. e. solvendo, because at that time all the taxes were paid by the farmers-general to the censors : Varr. L. L. v. 2. And because this was done at the end of every fifth year, hence lustrum is made to signify the intervening space.

119. Annus erat. The year consisted of ten lunar months.

120. Hic numerus, &c. The poet proceeds to assign the reason why the number, ten, was held in such estimation.

121. Seu quia tot digiti. So with the Greeks, ἑναπυρραδέιν, to count on five fingers.

122. Seu quia. See Fast. i. 33.

123. Seu quod adusque, &c. Or because we arrive so far as ten, the number increasing ; i. e. from units to tens ; thence, sc. from ten, we make the commencement of a new reckoning, beginning with unity as before. The poet means to say that the use of a decimal division of numbers was another reason for the respect paid to the number in the text.

125. Inde pares, &c. This reading has been adopted by the most approved MSS. and is in all probability the more correct, as there is little more than vague conjecture to support the other reading, patres ; there being no proof that the senate was ever divided into decuries by Romulus, upon which supposition only, such an interpretation could be founded as the reading is adduced to authorise. It is probable that the line Inde pares, &c. is to be taken as a general observation on what had been done by Romulus, which is afterwards explained in detail, Hastatos, &c. Hence pares may allude to the soldiers of the three several kinds of infantry being well matched ; for instance, the Hastati consisted of young men in the bloom and vigour of life, who formed the first line in battle ; the Principes, who occupied the second, were men of middle age, and the Triarii, who formed the third line, were veterans of distinguished valour, so that each line consisted of a distinct body of men, who were at the same time equally efficient in their respective orders. The pares centum may then be understood of the hundred soldiers or century contained in each of the ten companies, deni orbes, or decem Hastati ; for, as appears from Livy, xlii. 24, the first company, or century was called primus Hastatus, the second, secundus Hast. &c.

Romulus: Hastatos instituitque decem.
Et totidem Princeps, totidem Pilanus habebat

Corpora: legitimo quique merebat equo.
Quin etiam partes totidem Titiensibus idem, and so with the Principes and Triarii, Et totidem, &c. Whence the passage may be interpreted, 'Thence Romulus set apart a hundred equals, or of the same age, ἡλικιωταί, for each of the ten companies, and ordained the ten Hastati,' &c.

126. Hastatos. So called, because armed with long spears, hastæ, which were, however, afterwards laid aside as inconvenient. Varr. L. L. iv. 16. They were the first to engage, and if they failed to make an impression on the enemy, they withdrew behind the Principes, who then took up the battle. The leader of the primus hastatus, was called, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, Hastatus, as Princeps and Pilanus infr.

127. Princeps. The Principes were so called from their superiority over the rest of the infantry, 'quod essent præcipuum robur exercitûs;' or because they were composed of the more noble and wealthy class of citizens, or from their having originally formed the first line in battle. They were also divided into ten companies; 'Cretensi bello, Metello imperatore, octavum principem duxit, i. e. octavum ordinem principum.' Cic. ad Brut. Epist. 8. 'A. Man. Acilio mihi primus princeps prioris centuriæ est assignatus.' Liv. xlii. 34. Under the Cæsars the Principes were placed in the van of the army in battle; Veget. i. de re milit. 20, ii. 2, 8, 15. Pilanus. The Triarii, so called from their having occupied the third line in battle, were also called Pilani, from the pilum or javelin which they used, whence the Hastati and Principes who stood before them, were called Antepilani. By Pilanus is to be understood the commandant of the ten centuries of the Pilani or Triarii.

128. Legitimo equo. When Romulus divided the people into three tribes, he chose from each tribe a hundred young men of distinguished rank, wealth, and accomplishments, who served, merebant, as cavalry, and whom he used as a body-guard. The privileges of these knights, Equites, were, a horse supplied them at the public expense, hence called legitimus; a gold ring; the angustus clavus, or tunica angusticlavia; and a separate seat at the public spectacles. It cannot be inferred from the text that Romulus appointed a thousand equites, as he did Hastati, &c. but merely that he continued to observe his rule, selecting ten from each curia, or a hundred from each tribe. Whence in this, and the two preceding lines, the poet has given the exact amount of the legion, as constituted by Romulus, which contained three thousand foot, and three hundred horse.

129. Partes totidem. These three hundred horsemen were called generally Celeres, (τάχεις ἐπιταῖργα, ad opera veloces, Dionys. ii. 13, or from κελής, equus desultorius; or from Celer, their commander, who is said to have been appointed to this office for having murdered Remus; Fest.) and were divided into three centuries, i. e. three companies, containing an equal number, totidem partes. the Titienses, Ramnenses and Luceres, so named after the tribes from which they were chosen, the extinguished, and expiated by extraordinary sacrifices, hostiis majoribus; Liv. xxviii. 11. The Vestal who had been guilty of such neglect, was scourged by the Pontifex Max. Valer. Max. i. 1, 6, or by his order, ‘nuda quidem sed obscuro loco et velo medio interposito;’ Plutarch. in Num. At Rome, in the time of the war with Mithridates, and in the civil wars, the fire was not only extinguished, but the altar demolished. Ibid.

143. Annos hinc isse priores. That hence the ancient years began.

144. Anna Perenna. For her story, and the origin of her name, see infr. 519. et seq. Hoc mense. March, when the festival was celebrated, and sacrifices offered in honour of Anna Perenna, the goddess of the year.

145. Hinc etiam, &c. It is impossible to reconcile this assertion of the poet with history, which may fairly be presumed to be the more authentic. It has already appeared that the first consuls entered upon their office on the vii. Kal. Mart. Feb. 23d. The time of their appointment continued to fluctuate, until A. U. 598 or 600, when the first of January, Kal. Jan. was permanently fixed as the ‘Dies solennis, magistrat. ineund.’ Liv. xlvii.

146. Ad spatium belli. Down to the end of the third Punic war, A. U. 600. Perfide Pœne. Hannibal; for whose history and achievements, see Class. Dic. The epithet perfide, is applied to him in allusion to the characteristic treachery of his countrymen, whereby Punica fides became a proverb.

147. Denique quintus, &c. See Fast. i. n. 39.

149. Oliviferis arvis. Trebula Mutusca, a town of the Sabines, famous for its olives; ‘oliviferæque Mutuscae;’ Virg. Æn. vii. 711. It was called Treb. Mutusca, to distinguish it from Trebula Suffena, or Suffenatis, another Sabine town. Deductus. Accompanied, out of respect; præsertim officii causa; Forcel. Numa was met on the way by the senate and people, who expressed unequivocal delight at receiving him. The women bade him welcome with joyful acclamations; sacrifices were offered in all the temples, and so universal was the joy, that the city appeared not to have obtained a king but a kingdom. Plutarch. in Num.

150. Pompilius. Numa Pompilius, fourth son of Pomponius, an illustrious Sabine. He was born on the twenty-first of April, the day on which the foundation of Rome was laid by Romulus; as it would appear, Plutarch observes, under the direction of the gods. His character was so distinguished for piety and philosophy, that Tatius bestowed on him his only daughter Tatia in marriage. Numa, however, could not be induced to make Rome his residence, and conformably no less with his wife's taste than his own, he returned to dwell amongst the Sabines, and solace the declining years of his aged father. Upon the death of Tatia, he retired to the country, and frequented the groves and fields consecrated to the gods. Hence arose the story of his communion with the goddess Egeria, who is said to have endowed him with a knowledge of human and divine subjects, beyond the ordinary lot of man. Menses sensit abesse duos. See Fast. i. N. 43.

151 A Samio. Pythagoras, the son of Demaratus, a wealthy goldsmith, or according to others, of Mnesarchus a seal engraver, born in Samos, an island in the Icarian Sea, opposite to Ephesus. He was so called from Πύθιος, Apollo, and ἀγορά, oratio, because his doctrines were received as implicitly as oracles. He was a pupil of Pherecydes of Scyrus, one of the Cyclades, near Delos, who lived in the forty-fifth Olympiad, B. C. 600, and according to Josephus, Contr. Apion. i. studied philosophy in Egypt, at that period universally resorted to as the seat of learning. Having received all the advantages of education which his own country could afford, Pythagoras travelled into Egypt, whence he derived the greater number of those doctrines, which he subsequently taught with such eminent success. He proceeded to Babylon to make himself acquainted with astrology, and the discipline of the Chaldees; and turned back from the east to Crete and Sparta, where he made himself acquainted with the institutions of Minos and Lycurgus. On his return to Samos, after an absence of twenty years, he found it in possession of Polycrates, and retired in consequence to Peloponnesus, where having remained for a time, he went into that part of Italy called Magna Græcia. His ordinary residence was at Croton, Tarentum, Metapontum, and the neighbouring towns, where he propagated his principles with astonishing success. It is generally agreed, however, that he could not, as was supposed by some, have been by any possibility the instructor of Numa; Livy writes as follows: 'Auctorem doctrinæ ejus, quia non extat alius, falso Samium Pythagoram edunt: quem, Servio Tullio regnante Romæ, centum amplius post annos, in ultimæ Italiæ ora, circa Metapontum Heracleamque et Crotona, juvenum æmulantium studia cætus habuisse constat. Ex quibus locis, etsi ejusdem ætatis fuisset, quæ fama in Sabinos aut quo linguæ commercio, quenquam ad cupiditatem discendi excivisset; quove præsidio unus per tot gentes, dissonas sermone moribusque pervenisset? i. 18. Pythagoras arrived in Italy during the reign of Tarquinius Priscus, in the 51st Olympiad, and Numa was chosen king of Rome the third year of the 16th. So that thirty-four Olympiads, 136 years, intervened between Numa's elevation and the arrival of Pythagoras. This nearly agrees with the computation of Dionysius of Halicarnassus, who says that Numa reigned four generations, (a generation consisted of thirty years) before Pythagoras; and he further contradicts the assertion, that Numa studied under that philosopher at Croton after he was called to the crown, by adding that Croton was not built until four years after his election to the sovereignty of Rome. Plutarch says that Py-thagoras the Samian was believed to have preceded Numa by five generations or ages, but that there was another of the same name, a Spartan, who won the prize at the Olympic races in the 16th Olympiad; that in his travels through Italy, he became acquainted with Numa, and assisted him in regulating the government; and that by the advice of this Pythagoras so many of the Spartan institutions were introduced among the Romans. Eratosthenes mentions that the Samian also, while very young, was a victor at the Olympic games in the 48th Olympiad; but Lloyd, in his dissertation on the chronology of Pythagoras, Ed. Lond. 1699, endeavours to prove that the Olympic victor was not the same person as the philosopher, and this might give some colouring to the opinion of those alluded to by Plutarch. The same author mentions that there certainly existed several analogies between the regulations, rites, &c. of Numa and Pythagoras; the worship of Tacita by the former looks like an acquaintance with the philosopher's precept of silence. Neither of them would permit any images of the deity, whom they both agreed in believing invisible and incorruptible, and to be comprehended in the mind alone. Their sacrifices were similar; they were not celebrated with effusion of blood, but consisted for the most part in offerings of flour, wine, libations, &c. Plutarch recounts many other particulars, from which it would appear that Numa had been actually taught by Pythagoras, but it is impossible to reconcile this supposition with history. It remains but to adopt the conclusion of Livy upon the subject, speaking of Numa; 'Suoapte ingenio temperatum animum virtutibus fuisse.'

— Qui posse renasci. In allusion to the Pythagorean doctrine of Metempsychosis, or transmigration of souls, which Pythagoras probably learned in Egypt, where it was commonly taught. Upon this doctrine was founded the abstinence of the philosopher and his disciples from animal food, and the exclusion of animal sacrifices from their religious ceremonies. This latter part of the doctrine is described with the poet's usual elegance, Metam. xv. 158, et seq. and ably translated by Dryden.

'What then is death, but ancient matter drest
In some new figure, and a varied vest:
Thus all things are but altered, nothing dies;
And here and there th' unbodied spirit flies,
By time, or force, or sickness, dispossess'd,
And lodges where it lights, in man or beast,' &c.

In the Χρυσᾶ Έπη, or golden verses of Pythagoras, supposed to have been written by his disciple Empedocles, Fabric. Bib. Gr. i. 466, directions are given for a suitable diet, Αλλ' εἰργου βρωτωνων ὡν ἔιπομεν, &c.

152. Egeria. 'Simulat sibi cum Deâ Egeria congressus nocturnos esse.' Liv. Egeria was a nymph of the Arician grove, with whom Numa pretended to hold secret conferences, in order that he might wean the attention of the Romans from the tumults and excitement of war to the cultivation of social harmony and peace.

'Egeria! sweet creation of some heart

Numa professed to have received from her the institutions, sacred and civil, by the establishment of which he was enabled to accomplish the object he had in view. The name Egeria is derived by some from egerere, because the goddess was supposed to facilitate childbirth. She is said, upon the death of Numa, to have retired to the Arician grove, where Diana, moved with pity for her unavailing grief, changed her into a fountain of the same name. Metam. xv. 487, and infr. 261.

159. Moras solis, &c. The time which the sun takes in moving from Cancer to Capricorn and back again. Some understand by moras solis, the summer and winter solstice. Moras. Intervals or stages, Gr. μέρος, from μερίζω, divido. In sua signa. The signs of the Zodiac. Traditur exactis disposuisse notis. Is reported to have arranged by distinct tokens, the intervals, &c. Cæsar was guided in his plan of reforming the calendar principally by the Egyptian method of computation, by which the year was divided into 12 months, each consisting of 30 days, with five intercalary days at the end of the year, and of every fourth year six, Herod. ii. 4. These intercalary days, Cæsar distributed among the months which now contain 31 days, as also the days which he subtracted from February ; having adjusted the year, according to Dio, with such exactness to the course of the sun, that the insertion of one intercalary day in 1461 years would make up the difference, Dio. xliii. 26 ; there was, however, in time, found to be a variation of ten days between them. The Egyptian year began with September, the Julian with January. Cæsar's reformation of the calendar subjected him to some envy and railery ; it is said that upon a remark having been made by a friend in conversation with Cicero, 'Cras occidit Lyra,' the orator immediately replied, 'Nempe, ex edicto.'

162. Tempora quarta. A fourth part, six hours, e pleno die, of the whole day, twenty-four hours. Some copies read quinta in consequence of lustrum, in the line following, which generally signifies a term of five years, however, the emendation is unnecessary ; 'Nihilominus etiam de quadriennio completo, et quinquennio incepto lustrum dicitur. Forcel. in voc. et loc. cit.

163. In lustrum, &c. The four fourth-parts caused the addition of one whole day, quæ consummatur partibus, which is made perfect from the parts, to the term of four years, lustrum. Consumatur. Heins.

168. Matronæ. The kalends of March was the day for the Matronalia, a festival celebrated by matrons. Five causes are assigned for this apparent incongruity. Colant. On this day it is customary for husbands to bestow presents on their wives: Tibull. iii. 1. Suet. Vesp. 19.

169. Posita casside. In sign of his having assumed a posture of ease ; see supr. 1. Some copies read cuspidē, referring to supr. 8. as an authority.

170. Hasta. Of this weapon, which was invented by the Spartans, there were three species ; one of a shorter description, thrown from the hand, missilis ; another, somewhat longer, and more heavy, which might be used like the former, but was generally held in the hand, in close combat, cominus : the third was so heavy as to require to be discharged from an engine. Sometimes hasta signifies merely the shaft of the spear ; 'hasta pura,' i. e. without an iron head. Virg. Æneid, vi. 70.

172. In nova castra. Into a strange camp ; because of 'Nunc primum studiis, &c. supr.

173. Juvat, &c. It is pleasing to dwell upon this province also,

- Hoc solam ne se posse Minerva putet.

 Quod petis ; et memori pectore dicta nota.
 Parva fuit, si prima velis elementa referre, lest Minerva may suppose that she only can engage in it effectively.

175. Vates operose. So Fast. i. 101.

178. Hujus. Δικτιωνῶς, of this which exists at present. Mean as the city may have been at its origin, elementa, it gave a hope of the magnificence to which it had attained in the poet's time.

179. Populis angusta futuris. Too narrow for its destined population, but thought to be too spacious for its numbers at that time. Four years elapsed between the building of the city, and the carrying away of the Sabine women.

181. Nati. Romulus.

182. De canna straminibusque. Of reeds and thatch. So Virgil, 'Romuleoque recens horrebat regia culmo.' Æneid, viii. 654. Domum. Called by Servius, Curia Calabra. Forcellinus places this Curia close to the hut of Romulus in the Capitol, and says that it was called Calabra, acalandō, because previous to the promulgation of the Fasti, the people were wont to be summoned thither, immediately after the new moon, by the Pontifex Minor, who, upon the offering of the customary sacrifices by the Rex Sacrificulus, proclaimed the arrangement of the nones and ides, the dies fasti and nefasti, holidays and games, &c. for the ensuing month. The primitive habitation of the founder of the Roman empire was regarded with profound veneration by his posterity ; one of the most important duties of the priests was to secure it, by constant repair, against the ravages of time.

187. Spernebant. 'Nusquam benigne legatio audita est : adeo simul spernebant, simul tantam in medio crescentem molem sibi ac posteris suis metuebant. A plerisque rogitantibus dismissi, Ecquod feminis quoque asylum aperuissent ? id enim demum compar connubium fore.' Liv.

Tolle preces, dixi: quod petis, arma dabunt.

Jamque fere raptæ matrum quoque nomen habebant,

193. Extremis dantur connubia gentibus. Nations, the most remote from each other, enjoyed the privilege of intermarriage, but the proposals of Romulus were rejected by those who dwelt around him; 'Legatos circa vicinas gentes misit qui societatem connubiumque novo populo peterent,' &c. Liv.

197. Conso. The god of secrets. It is said that the true name of this deity was not allowed to be divulged, and consequently they distinguished him by one which is merely expressive of an attribute; Consus being derived from conso, an obsolete verb for consulo, meaning that he was the god of counsel, or qu. cossus or coassus, from con and sum, because in that capacity he is present at, and assists in deliberations; or from consum for conditum, in which sense he may be identified with equestrian Neptune, who was the god both of secrets and the sea, Ascon. in Verr. ii. 10. A subterraneous altar was consecrated to him, in consequence, in the Circus, which was never revealed except during the sacrifices at the Consualia; by which it was to be understood that deliberations of importance were not to be disclosed: this will explain the passage in the text. Tertullian speaks of this altar as existing in his time in the Circus, De Spect. c. 5, at the entrance of the race-course, with this inscription, 'Consus consilio, Mars duello, Lares comitio potentes.' Romulus appointed a festival in honour of this deity when he formed the design of carrying away the Sabine women in order to ensure its secrecy and success. It is supposed by some that not merely the Consualia, but all the Circensian games, were held in honour of equestrian Neptune; Virgil appears to class them together, 'raptas sine more Sabinas Consessu cavæ, magnis Circensibus actis.' Æneid, viii. 636. This festival, consisting of horse and mule races, &c. was held commonly on the XII. Kal. Sept. according to the old calendar, the anniversary of the exploit which it was intended to commemorate.

199. Intumuere Cures. The Sabines were incensed. Et quos. The Sabines were not the first to take up arms and revenge the insult offered to them. The Cœninenenses, Crustumini, and Antemnates were already in the field, while the Sabines were wasting time in preparations; but they were rapidly defeated, and the Sabines were at last roused to exertion. They marched against Rome under the conduct of Tatius; the sequel is given in the text.

200. Generis. The Romans. Socer. The Sabines.

203. Dictam in ædem. To the appointed temple, so, 'dicta sub arbore sedit.' Metam. iv. 95.

204. Nurus. Hersilia, a Sabine woman, the wife of Romulus; she was deified after death, and worshipped as the goddess of youth and beauty, under the name of Hora or Ora.

206. Non ultra. We cannot, longer, tardily pursue the path of duty.

207. Utra parte. Romans and Sabines.

tation. Some commentators who mistake folly for ingenuity, have interpreted this from the preceding line, and understand the passage, qui vix poterat clamare avum, &c. 'The child that was not able to call upon its grandfather, made the effort by pronouncing the two interjections, ah and væ, i.e. ave !' and so succeeded in making its pathetic appeal, and quieting the critical conscience of these erudite annotators.

242. Quarum militiam. Whose province, militia, and prayers, vota, are fulfilled in childbirth. So Canace, to Macareus, Heroid, Ep. xi. 48. 'Nescia quæ faceret subitos mihi causa dolores, Et rudis ad partus, et nova miles eram.' Militia, translate, est quodcunque laboriosum munus; Forcel. So Propertius, Eleg. i. 6, 29. 'Non ego sum laudi, non natus idoneus armis: Hanc me militiam (sc. amoris) fata subire volunt.' See also Fast. ii. 9.

243. Adde. The poet assigns a fourth reason. Excubias. Watches were set upon the Esquiline hill, by Romulus, either during the war with the Sabines, or in consequence of his mistrusting Titus Tatius, which is alluded to by Liv. 'Eam rem, (sc. Tatii cadem) minus ægre, quam dignum erat, tulisse Romulum ferunt: seu ob infidam societatem (quia plerumque socio regni parum fidendum est, Walker.) regni, seu quia haud injuria cæsum credebatur.' i. 14. From these excubias, the hill is said to have been called Exquilias; others say from exculta, because of its having been added to the city, and cultivated by Servius Tullius, who dwelt there. Varro approves of the latter etymology, and states as a reason for Exquilias being plural, that it consisted of two hills, one of which, he says, was called Mons Cispus, the other, Mons Oppius; de L. L. i. 8. It is more correctly written Exq. than Esq. however, they are used indifferently.

245. A nuribus. On the kalends of March a temple was consecrated by the matrons to Juno Lucina; another reason for the celebration of the Matronalia upon this day.

247. Quid moror. The poet assigns the fifth and last cause.

249. Mater. Juno, the mother of Mars. Amat nuptas. Because she presides over wedlock and childbirth. Matris me turba freq. The train of his mother's worshippers paid him respect for her sake. Frequentant, sc. celebrant.

250. Tam pia causa. That through gratitude to the mother, they should do honour to the son.

251. Deæ. Juno. Florentibus herbis. Florent. aris. Heins.

253. Lucina. Juno, so called, because she aids in bringing the offspring to light, in lucem. Donat. ad Terent. Andr. 3. 2. 15. This title is also given to her, as Juno is frequently made to signify the air, through which light is diffused.

 Ut solvat partus molliter illa suos.

ANCILIORUM FESTUM.

QUIS mihi nunc dicat, quare cœlestia Martis
 Arma ferant Salii, Mamuriumque canant?

255. Resoluta crine. With unbraided hair; emblematic of a suppliant.

257. Quis mihi nunc dicat. The poet having concluded his colloquy with Mars, proceeds to the discussion of the Salii, &c. in which he prays the assistance of Egeria.

258. Arma ferant Salii. By the cœlestia arma is to be understood the ancile, the shield which fell from heaven upon the occasion stated in the text, infr. 371. Upon the preservation of this shield the security of the city was declared by an oracle to depend, and Numa in consequence, directed eleven to be made, of an exactly similar form, in order to ensure its safety; the genuine one being confounded with the rest. They were fashioned by Mamurius Veturius, an artificer, who asked as his reward that his name might be inserted in the Carmen Saliare, and chanted by the Salii, when they carried the shields round the city; whence Mamuriumque canant, see infr. 387. The ancile, called by Plutarch, ἀγκύλιον, from ἀγκυλος, curvus, was a small oblong shield, rounded at either end, with the sides concave, i.e. narrowing towards the centre; hence infr. 376. 'Quaque notes oculis, angulus omnis abest;' it was indented or notched, round the edge, like the pelta of the Thracians, 'ab omni parte recisum,' infr. 375, and so derived from am sc. circa, and cæsum. Others explain the 'omni parte recisum,' to mean a circular shield with the verge all round equidistant from the centre; in which sense it is analogous to the Homeric, ἀσπίδα πάντοσσι ἴσην; the former, however, is the explanation of Forcellinus, which is further borne out by Festus, in Mamur, who mentions having seen a medal of Antoninus Pius, upon which the shield was stamped as described above. Besides the ancile, there were six other pledges, as it were, for the stability of the Roman empire, which were most religiously preserved; the needle of Cybele; the ashes of Orestes; the sceptre of Priam; the veil of Iliona; the Palladium; and the four-horsed chariot modelled in clay, on the top of the temple of Jupiter in the Capitol, which the Romans had engaged an artist at Veii to construct, and were obliged to obtain by waging war, because, it is said, the work increased to such a size during the progress of its being baked that it could not be removed. This was a sufficient omen for the Romans, who were sensitively superstitious upon all points connected with the durability of their empire, to insist upon possessing it.

— Salii. Priests of Mars, instituted by Numa, to guard the sacred shields, so called a Saliendo, infr. 387, because they danced during their progress round the city, wearing the shields suspended from their necks. According to Polemon, they derived their name from Salius, an Arcadian whom Æneas brought from Mantinea into Italy, and by whom the Italian youths were taught to dance in armour, ἐνὶ πλῶν. This ceremony of making the circuit of the city with the shields took place every year in the month of March, and lasted for some days, after which the shields were deposited in the temple of Mars, and during which time no deliberations were held, or any steps taken with regard to war. Forcel.

259. Nympha. Egeria. Nemori stagnoque operata. Ministering to the grove and lake of Diana. Operor, to be employed in sacred rites, to sacrifice; this is supposed to be the primitive signification of the term. Forcel.

260. Numæ conjux. sc. Amica; it is used in the same sense as in the following, ‘capta cupidine conjux—Fecit avem Circe.’ Virg. Æneid, vii. 189, where Circe is called the conjux of Picus. Ad tua festa. To the festival ordained by your directions.

261. Vallis Aricinæ, &c. ‘There is a lake, surrounded by the shady grove of the Arician vale, hallowed by traditional veneration.’ This vale lay to the left of the route to Aricia, and here, by the advice of the oracle, Orestes consecrated the image of Diana Taurica. See infr. x. 269.

263. Hic latet Hippolytus. He was falsely accused by his step-mother Phædra to Theseus, of a crime to which she had endeavoured unsuccessfully to tempt him, and fell a victim to his father’s imprecation in consequence; Neptune having sent a monster from the sea, which terrified his horses, as they were proceeding along the shore of the Sinus Saronicus, and caused them to destroy both chariot and driver by dashing them against the rocks. He was restored to life by Æsculapius, and fled to Italy, where he assumed the name Virbius, qu. vir bis, and was concealed by Diana in the Arician grove. See Virg. Æneid, vii. 761.

264. Unde nemus nullis, &c. ‘Unde etiam templo Triviæ lucisque sacratis Cornipedes arcantur equi; quod litore currum, Et juvenem monstribus pavidis effudere marinis.’ Ibid.

265. Licia. Threads, by which the offerings or gifts of those who had succeeded in their prayers, were suspended. Longas velantia sepes. Covering the long hedges. A nearly similar custom prevails at present in many parts of this country; the hedges and bushes in the vicinity of what is supposed to be a holy well, are decorated with a motley assemblage of shreds and patches, upon the anniversary of its patron saint, by the grateful objects of its supposed miraculous cures.

266. Tabella. A votive tablet, containing the prayer of the suppliant; an acknowledgment of his obligations for its success, or a painting of the deity, which was hung up in honour of whomsoever the petition was addressed to. 'Nunc Dea, nunc succurre mihi, nam posse mederi, Picta docet templis multa tabella tuis.' Tibull. See Horat. Od. i. 5, 13.

267. Potens voti. 'Having obtained her prayer.'

268. Femina lucentes, &c. So Statius, in Herc. Surrent. in allusion to this rite: 'Fumat Aricinum Triviæ nemus.' Ab urbe. sc. Aricia.

269. Regna tenent, &c. By regna, is to be understood the priesthood of the Arician grove, which was called as supr. 'nemus Dianæ;' so Strabo v. a med. τὸ δ' Ἀρτεμίσιον, ὃ καλοῦσι Νέμος. The deity herself was hence called Nemoralis or Nemorensis, and her ministering priest, Rex Nemorensis. Runaway slaves, pedibus fugaces, Gr. δραπέται, were appointed to this office, in order to commemorate the flight of Orestes from the Chersonesus Taurica. According to Euripedes, Orestes consulted the oracle of Apollo at Delphi, how he might escape the Furies, by whom he was persecuted for the murder of his mother Clytemnestra. He was desired to carry away the statue of Diana from the Cherson. Taur. of which Thoas was then king, by whose order all strangers were immolated at the altars of the goddess. Orestes and his friend Pylades, who accompanied him on this dangerous enterprize, were both seized and condemned to be slain. Iphigenia, the sister of Orestes, was the officiating priestess of Diana's temple, and hearing that the strangers were from her own country, she offered to spare one of them, if he would convey letters from her to Greece. A contest arose between the devoted friends, which should remain and be sacrificed; 'Ire jubet Pylades carum moriturus Orestes, Hic negat; inque vicem pugnat uterque mori.' Ovid. ex Pont. iii. el. 2. Pylades at length yielded to the importunities of Orestes, and consented to carry the letter, which he found to be directed to Orestes himself. This led to a discovery, which terminated in the murder of Thoas, and the flight of Iphigenia and her brother, bringing with them the statue of Diana, which, according to Ovid and others, was placed in the Nemus Aricinum, where her worship was finally established.

The phrase fortesque manu, alludes to the circumstance of the priest being liable to be murdered by any candidate for his office, who happened to be more powerful than himself; a species of usurpation commented upon severely by Strabo, lib. v. and others; mentioned by Suetonius, in Calig. 35. 'Nemorensi regi quod multos jam annos potiretur sacerdotis, validiorem adversarium subornavit,' whence et perit exemplo, &c.

271. Defluit. Flows down the grove. Incerto. So gentle as to be scarcely distinguished, or to leave the hearer in doubt whence it came; or it may be used, in the sense of its corresponding term in the following:

'There is a little unpretending ril

Of limpid water, humbler far than aught

WORDSWORTH.

Lapidus rivus. The rocky stream, called by Scaliger, Ἰωρῆων, from the vicinity of the fountain Juturna.

272. Exiguis. Because of its extreme cold, the draughts might be frequent but not long. Bibes.
Bibunt. Heins.

273. Egeria est. Supposed by some to be synonymous with Juturna. Camœnis. So Livy; 'Lucus erat quem medium ex opaco
specu fons perenni rigabat aqua.
Quo quia persæpe Numa sine arbitris, velut ad congressum Deæ, sese inferebat, Camœnis eum luwritten casmenæ or carmenæ, a

274. Consilium. For Consiliatrix. The counsellor or adviser; so servitium is used for servus, and
sclerus for scelestus, &c.

275. Principio, &c. Compare
Liv. i. 19.

277. Ne firmior omnia posset.
That the stronger might not obtain the supreme power; all right being prescribed, and wrongs redressed by law.' 'Jura inventa metu injusti fateare necesse est.'

&c. Hor. Sat. i. 3, 111.

280. Et cum cive, &c. There was an end to civil strife.

281. Trux. From atrox by aphæresis; fierce, stern. Visa jam vertitur ara. Is changed or reformed at the sight of the altar.

Vertitur may refer here to the custom of suppliants, who with their right hand on their lips, (adorantes, either, kissing hands,
ad ora dextram ferentes, whence Sueton. in Neron. 'Nec deerat vulgus, jacere oscula,' or kissing the statues of the deities, ad ora Deor. oscula, Gr. λάβοῦντα, feren-tes) turned to the right to pray; so Plaut. in Curcul. l. i. 70. 'Ph.

Quo me vortam nescio. Pa. Si
Deos salutas dextroversum censeo;' and Livy, in allusion to the same ceremony, 'Convertentem se inter hanc venerationem, traditur memoriæ prolapsus cecidisse.'
v. 21, sub. fin. Plutarch, in reference to the same event described by the Roman historian, says, that 'Camillus having addressed a prayer to Jupiter, and turned about, (as the custom of the Romans is to turn to the right when they worship or pray) then fell down.' Hence vertitur, may mean, 'is turned;' in order to

284. Effusis, &c. Exhausts the air of the outpoured showers.

287. Dea. Egeria. Piabile fulmen. The lightning admitted of expiation. Fulmen, from fulgere.

289. Picus Faunusque. See supr. n. 35.

290. Romani numen uterque soli. Both Dii Indigetes.

291. Nec sine vi tradent. Compare Fast. i. 367, et seq. Virgil. Georg. iv. and Hom. Odys. iv. where Menelaus is described as consulting Proteus by the advice and assistance of his daughter Eidothea. Adhibe sua vincula captis. Heins. as Art. Amat. iii. 'Arida nec vinclis crura resolve suis.'

293. Aventino. One of the seven hills upon which Rome was built. It was so called from the birds, ab avibus, which used to retire there from the Tiber, or from Aventinus, son of Romulus Silvius, and king of the Albans, who was buried there, or ab adventu, because the Latins resorted in common to a temple built upon it in honour of Diana. Varro, L. iv. 7, approves of a nearly similar etymology, but on different grounds. He describes this hill as having been originally separated from the rest by marshes, over which the Romans were conveyed, advchebantur, on rafts, paying one farthing each for the passage, advectus. However he is quoted, de vita pop. Rom. by Servius, in Æneid. vii. 657, 'Pulcher Aventinus,' &c. as saying, that upon the admission of the Sabines into the city, the Mons Aventinus was allotted to them by Romulus, which they so called after a river of their own country, Avens. This river is not mentioned by any other author: Livy, Dionysius, Festus, and Victor, agree that the hill took its name from the king of the Albans, already mentioned.

Adjacent to this hill was a dark grove of holm-oak, lucus suberat niger, &c. which from its appearance might be supposed the dwelling of a god, quo posses viso, &c.

295. In medio gramen, muscoque adoperta, &c.

 Picus only, were in the habit of cording to Plutarch, Picus and Faunus traversed Italy, exhibiting extraordinary magical feats, in the same way as those called by the Greeks the Dactyli of Mount Ida. These Dactyli were the same as the Curetes, to whom Rhea intrusted the guardianship of Jupiter while an infant. They were in number, five, or as some say, ten, and all belonging to Ida in Crete. From their benevolence to mankind, they were, like Picus and Faunus, considered as demigods. Even their name was regarded as an infallible preservative in time of danger. There were also stones called Dactyli Idæi, which were supposed to be endued with sovereign virtues, and were frequently wrought into amulets, which were worn on the thumbs.

is a limit to the exercise of our privileges as deities. Numen, signifies properly the attributes of the Deus, or deity; 'quo numine læso, Quidve dolens, regina deum &c.' Virg. Æneid, i. 8, and Heyne's note in loc. cit.

313. Et qui dominemur. Et qui dignemur. Neapol.

314. Arbitrium est, &c. Jove has full power over his own weapons. 'Regum timendorum in proprios greges, Reges in ipsos imperium est Jovis.' Horat. Od. iii. 1, 5, 6.

315. Deducere cœlo. To charm him down from the skies. So Virgil. Eclog. vi. 71. 'Cantando rigidas deducere montibus ornos;' and Plutarch, in describing the scene in the text, κατάγειν τὸν Δία. Deduco is a term used in incantations; whence 'carminibus deducere Lunam,' is common with the Latins; κατάγειν τὴν σελήνην with the Greeks. 'Quæ sidera excantata voce Thessala Lunamque cœlo deripit.' Horat. Epod. 5, 45.

320. Nubila Styx. The gloomy Styx. On solemn occasions the gods used to swear by this river of the infernals, and to violate the oath was considered an unpardonable perjury. Abstinence from nectar, and a degradation from the dignity of a deity for a hundred years, constituted the penalty for such an offence. 'Stygiamque paludem, Dii cujus jurare timent et fallere numen.' Virg. Æneid, vi. 323.

321. Emissi quid agant, &c. What they do when delivered from their bonds, what spells they utter, and by what device they draw down Jove from his supreme abode, it is forbidden man to know.

326. Eliciumque. Jupiter, so called, from elicere, as supr. Plutarch writes Ilicius, from Gr. ἱλιος, propitious; but the poet is the more correct. The Greeks also had their Δια καταβατην, synonymous with Elicius.

327. Cacumina. Qu. acumina, the extreme summits.

Cæde caput*, &c. at the same time that he concealed the truth, abdidit verum, to try the ingenuity of Numa. Dubio ore. By his equivocal expressions. Remota. Remissa. Stroz.

337. Cæde caput. Jove desires him to cut off a head, an operation which Numa consents to perform on an onion, cædenda cepa, &c. (caput alli. Pers. 5, 188.) Jove adds, hominis, sc. caput, which Numa explains by summos capillos, the topmost hairs; (caput and capilli are often used indifferently, 'comere caput,' Sueton. in Aug. c. 79.) Jove then demands a life, animam, to which Numa replies, 'of a fish;' a pilchard according to Plutarch. This conference is eminently characteristic of Numa, who declined the human sacrifice, apparently implied in the ambiguous commands of Jove, and which would not have been unsuited to the barbarous practice and spirit of the times.

pire. Cynthius. Apollo, so called from Cynthus, a mountain in Delos. Pignora certa. The ancile, or sacred shield.

345. Dixit, et, &c. He spoke, and with loud thundrings is borne above the trembling firmament, and leaves Numa in the attitude of worship.

348. Tarda difficilisque fides. Credit, slow in coming, and obtained with difficulty.

349. Si verba sequatur exitus. Should the result correspond with the prediction.

350. Crastina. sc. What shall take place to-morrow. Crastine, Heins. for quisquis crastinus aderis.

353. Dubii. Hesitating. Tarda. Because their belief in what he had stated, fides, depends on the day yet to come, dependet a veniente die. Adveniente die. Al.

355. Mollis erat, &c. The earth was soft, and sprinkled with the morning rime.

357. Solio acerno. On a throne of maple wood. For light and elegant workmanship the maple-tree, acer, held the next place to the cedar in the estimation of the ancients. There were several species of it, crispum, crassivenium, campestre, &c. Plin. xvi. 15. From its extreme hardness, and the closeness of its grain, it was in frequent use for tablets also; 'Veneri fidas sibi Naso ministros Dedicat: at nuper vile fuistis acer.' Ovid. Amor. i. Eleg. 11. sub. fin.

359. Ortus erat. The sun had merely risen with its extreme verge.

361. Niveo amictu. Having his head covered with a snow-white veil, in order that nothing inauspicious might meet his eyes, and interrupt his prayers. So Virgil, 'Purpureo velare comas adoperatus amictu, Ne qua inter sanctos ignes, in honore Deorum, Hostilis facies occurrat, et omnia turbet.' Æneid, iii. By some, amic-tus is supposed to have been the cap which was tied under the chin; peculiar to the priests; see infr. n. 395, sub. fin.

Jam bene dis notas sustulit ille manus.

Atque ita, Tempus adest promissi muneris, inquit.

Pollicitam dictis, Jupiter, adde fidem.

Dum loquitur, totum jam sol emergerat orbem : 365

Et gravis atherio venit ab axe fragor.

Ter tonuit sine nube deus, tria fulgura misit.

362. Bene dis notas manus. His hands, well known to the gods; from their having been so often raised in supplication.

365. Totum emergerat orbem. Had raised its entire disc. Emergo, is generally used in a neuter sense, but here in active; see also, infr. 513.

366. Et gravis. En gravis. Heins.

367. Ter tonuit sine nube Deus. Thunder in a clear sky was looked upon as an extraordinary prodigy, from the days of Homer. Its effect upon Horace was such as to make him abjure so much of his Epicureanism as consisted in a disbelief in the providence, at least, if not in the existence of the gods; 'Parcus deorum cultor et infrequens, Insanientis dum sapientiae Consultus erro, nunc retrorsum Vela dare, atque iterare cursus Cogor relictos: namque Diespiter, Igni corusco nubila dividens Plenumque, per purum tonates Egit equos volucremque currum; Quo bruta tellus,' &c. Od. i. 34, l, et seq. The Epicurean doctrine, with regard to thunder, may be deduced from the following lines of Lucretius; 'Fulgmina gignier e crassis, alteque putandum est Nubibus exstructis: nam cælo nulla sereno, nec leviter densis mittuntur nubibus unquam.' vi. 245. So in the 'Nubes' of Aristophanes, Socrates is made to disprove the existence of Jupiter, because there never was rain without clouds.

ΣΤΡΕΨ. Ὁ Ζεὺς δ' ἡμῖν, φέρε, πρὸς τῇς γῆς, δολύμπιος οὐ βίος ἐστίν; ΣΩΚ. Ποῖος Ζεὺς; οὐ μὴ ληρήσεις; οὐδ' ἐστὶ Ζεὺς.

ΣΤΡΕΨ. Τί λέγεις σύ; ἀλλὰ τίς υἱ; τουτὶ γὰρ ἔμοιγ' ἀπόφηναι πρῶτον ἀπάντων.

ΣΤΡΕΨ. ἢ τὸν Απόλλω, τοῦτο γέ τοι τῷ νυνὶ λόγῳ εὖ προσέφυσας.

Streps. Hold! Olympian Jupiter—Is he no god?

Socr. What Jupiter? What god?

Prythee no more—away with him at once!

Streps. Say'st thou? who gives us rain? answer me that.

Socr. These (sc. the clouds) give us rain; as I will straight demonstrate:

Come on now—when did you e'er see it rain

Without a cloud? If Jupiter gives rain

Let him rain down his favours in the sunshine,

Nor ask the clouds to help him.

Streps. You have hit it,

'Tis so; heaven help me, &c.

MITCHELL.

It may not be amiss to mention here what deities were acknowledged by the Aristophanic Socrates;

368. Mira, sed acta, loquor. I speak wonders, but realities.

369. A media, &c. So Turnus ; ‘ Video medium discedere cœlum.’ Virg. Æneid, ix. 20. ‘ As if day had cloven the skies.’—
 SHELLEY.

371. Versatum leniter. Poised gently on the delicate breeze, descends.

375. Idque ancile vocat, &c. See supr. n. 258.

377. Imperii sortem. That the fate of the empire was identified with this, or involved in it.

379. Plura. Sc. eleven more.
Cælata. Wrought in a similar fashion.

380. Error ut, &c. That deception might meet, or mislead, the eyes of the plotting.

381. Mamurius, &c. Mamurius, it is hard to say whether more distinguished, exactior, for his integrity, morum, or skill in his craft, fabræve artis, accomplished that task. These eleven shields were said to have resembled the original so strongly, that Numa could not perceive the difference.

385. Saliis. See supr. n. 258.
 sub. fin. Besides the derivations already given, Plutarch mentions as probable, αγκων, cubitus, ἄκισις, remedium, &c.

386. Armaque. According to Dionysius and Plutarch, the Sali were habited in a purple vest, with a broad belt of brass ; on their heads they wore a brazen helmet, and carried short swords in their hands which they struck upon the shields, keeping time to the dancing and singing. Ad cer- tos, &c. sc. the Carmen Saliare ;
 mentioned by Horace ; ‘ Jam Sa-et illud, Quod mecum ignorat, solus vult scire videri,' &c. and Quintilian i. 6, 40, 'Saliorum carmina vix sacerdotibus suis satis intellecta.'

388. Nominaque. According to Tacitus, this compliment of having his name inserted in the Carmen Saliare, was decreed to Germanicus, among other tokens of respect, after his decease.

390. Mamuriumque vocant. By many this account is supposed to be fabulous ; M. Varro would have Veturius Mamurius to signify, merely, Vetus memoria.

394. Conditâ cum fuerint. After the shields have been laid up in the temple of Mars.

395. His—lucibus. During these days ; according to Festus thirty, others say but three. Conjux apicati cincta Dialis. The girded wife of the mitred priest of Jove, the Flamen. Dial. The apex, whence apicatus, was properly a small woollen tuft, or tassel, which the Flamen, or high priest wore on the top of his cap. It also signifies a small rod, generally of the olive tree, which was fixed in the top of the cap and wound round with wool tied on with thread ; whence it is derived, Serv. ad Æneid, x. 273, from apere, an obsolete verb, signifying to bind or tie after the fashion of the Fla-mines. Hence by metonymy apex is used to imply the cap itself, which was generally made of sheep-skin with the wool on, and worn by the Flamen Dial. whenever he appeared in public, or was engaged in sacrificing. It had ears, called offendices, quia in mentum offendunt, i.e. incidunt, which, except in warm weather, were tied under the chin. According to Scaliger and Servius, however, the inconvenience arising from heat was obviated by the priest's wearing a smaller species of cap, apiculum or filum, and carrying the apex or mitre in his hand ; thus complying with the injunctions, which he was bound to obey ; never to appear in public with an uncovered head, and never without the mitre. Cincta. The wife of the Flamen Dial. wore a crimson hood, rica, such as women used when engaged in sacrificing, and a scarlet robe, venenatum, a veneno ; 'Flaminica Dialis venenato operitur, et in rica surculum de arbore felici habet.' Massur. Sabin. apud Gell. x. 16, whence cincta. The Regina, or wife of the Flamen Dial. wore also at the sacrifices a kind of crown, a bough of the pomegranate, punicus malus, bent into a circle, and the ends tied together with white thread.

TERT. NON. MART. OCCIDIT ARCTOPHYLAX.

CUM croceis rorare genis Tithonia conjux
 Cœperit, et quintæ tempora lucis aget ;
 Sive est Arctophylax, sive est piger ille Bootes, Mergetur, visus effugietque tuos.

397. Tertia nox. On the night of the v. Non. Mart. March 3d. Suos moverit ignes. Shall have set its starry fires in motion. Emersa. Having arisen. Demissa. Al. De mense. Ursin. Voss. Arond. Dimensa. Ambros. ; however, the reading in the text is sufficiently borne out by the best copies, as also by the frequent use of the term in the acceptation above ; Metam. xv. 'Cernis et emersas in lucem tendere noctes.' Stat. Theb. i. 'quem sol emersus Eoo cardine,' &c.

398. Conditus alter. sc. Notius sets acronically.

399. Nam duo sunt. See Fast. ii. ns. 340—1. Austris hic est. This is called frequently Notius Minor, to distinguish it from the Notius Major or Piscis Major, a constellation which is also in the southern region of the heaven, supposed to be that to which Virgil alludes. Georg. iv. 234. 'Sidus fugiens ubi piscis aquosi,' &c. and which is said to be the parent of the Zodiacal Pisces, having been raised to the stars for preserving Isis. Hygin.

400. A vento. See ns. as above.

401. Croceis genis. The poet imparts to the cheeks of Aurora a complexion indicative of the mingled hues of red and gold, which pervade the sky at her rising. Rorare. To shed her dew. Rutilare. Zulich. Mazar. Rutilare comis. Heins.

402. Quintæ tempora lucis. On the iii. Non. Mart. March 5th, Arctophylax, or Bootes, sets cosmically. See Fast. ii. n. 153. The greater and lesser bear, the former of which is likewise called Charles' wain, form together the sign Arctos, or constellation of the Bear. It is also called Currus, and Plaustrum, Gr. ἀμαζα, Iliad. xviii. 487 ; and Septentriones, either because the seven stars composing it are so placed as to form a triangle, trigonum ; or from triones, a rustic term, according to Varro, for boves, oxen ; qu. terrones, suited for ploughing and cultivating the earth, terra. From this latter sense Arctophylax may be called Bootes, from Gr. βούς, as appearing to tend the team ; others derive the name from βόων, vocifero, without any very obvious reason.

403. Piger. Because of his setting tediously. Hygin.

 Quisquis ades, canæque colis penetrabilia Vestæ, 415
 Cratera Iliacis turaque pone focis.
 Cæsar innumeris. quem maluit ille mereri,

405. Vindemitor. The constellation of the vintager, near the right shoulder of Virgo. By at non effugiet, reference is made to the setting of Bootes in the preceding line ; and it is to be noted that this sign rises acronyally on the III. Non. Mart. In this the poet differs from Columella, who, xi. 3, sect. 58, says it rises on the VII. or VI. Kal. Sept. and Pliny on the XI. Kal. Sept. The name was bestowed on Ampelus, as presiding over the vintage season. Hoc quoque causam. It is but a trifling delay to relate whence this constellation derives its origin.

407. Ampelon. Gr. "Αμπίλον, from ἄνα and πέλεις, Ion. for οἶνος, vinum. Intonsum. The long haired Ampelus.

408. Ismariis jugis. Ismarus was a mountain in Thrace, near the river Hebrus.

409. Tradidit huic, &c. This couplet is suspected by Heinsius. Quæ nunc, &c. Called "Αμπίλον, de pueri nomine.

411. Dum legit, &c. While heedlessly he gathers on a bough the blushing grapes.

412. Vehit. So of Ariadne ; ' Tigribus in cælum vecta Ariadna tuis ? Propert.

413. Sextus—Phæbus. Prid. Non. Mart. March 6th. Oceano. Leaving the ocean. Alatis eq. Elatis eq. sc. e mari. Ambros. Maz. Zulich. Æthera carpit. Climbs the sky.

415. Quisquis ades. The poet addresses the worshippers of Vesta.

416. Cratera. For libations. So Horace ; ' Verbenas, pueri, pouite, thuraque bimi cum patera meri.' Od. i. 19, 14.

417. Innumeris—titulis. It will appear from what has been already stated on this subject, that the term innumeris is scarcely an exaggeration. The Roman senate exhausted their ingenuity in seasoning their adulation. Quem maluit ille mereri. Of this dignity Augustus was most ambitious, in order that he might seem to be in favour with the gods.

 Vivite inextincti, flammaque, Duxque, precor.

NON. MART. FESTUM VEJOVIS.

UNA nota est Martis Nonis : sacrata quod illis

418. Pontificalis honos. Augustus was appointed Pontifex Maximus, Prid. Non. Mart. u.c. 740 or 741, in the room of Lepidus, deceased. This dignity was assumed by all the succeeding emperors, until the time of Gratian, by whom it was refused, and also the rites of Pagan Rome rejected. Zosim. iv. 36. The Pontifices Max. resided always in a house that was public property ; 'habitavit, (sc. Cæsar,) in Sacra via, domo publica,' Suet. Cæs. 46, called Regia, Plin. Ep. iv. 11, 6, 'quod in ea sacra a Rege sacrificulo erant solita usurpari.' Festus, vel, quod in ea Rex. sacrif. habitare consuëset.' Serv. in Virg. Æneid, viii. 363. So when Augustus became Pontifex. M. he resigned a part of his house to the public, and gave the Regia, which Dio calls the house of the Rex sacrorum, to the Vestal Virgins, to whose residence it was adjacent, Dio. liv. 27 ; whence it is identified by some with the Regia Numæ, the palace of Numa, Ovid. Fast. iii. 1. 30 ; (to which Horace alludes ; 'Ire dejectum monumenta regis Templaque Vestæ,' Od. i. 2, 15 ; ) and Augustus, Suet. 76 ; said subsequently to have been occupied by the atria of Vesta ; see Fast. vi. 247, called Atrium Regium, Liv. xxvi. 27.

419. Ignibus, &c. 'The divinity of the immortal Cæsar presides over the everlasting fires ; you behold the united pledges of the empire's safety.' Pignora. The fires of Vesta, and Augustus Pont. Max.

421. De veteris, &c. 'Most worthy prize, recovered from the embers of old Troy, with which Æneas, burdened, was protected from his foes ; a priest, sprung from Æneas, claims an alliance with your deity ; Vesta defend your kinsman's head.' Cognata numina. Alluding to Augustus having descended from Æneas the son of Venus, and Vesta being the daughter of Saturn. Ortus ab Ænea. Because Augustus was the adopted son of Julius Cæsar, and the Julian family boasted their descent from Iulus, or Ascanius, the son of Æneas by Creusa.

425. Quos sancta, &c. 'Your fires, which with a hallowed hand he tends, are thriving well.' Ille. As Pontif. Max.

426. Flammaque. Vesta. Duxque. Cæsar.

427. Una nota est Martis. 'Mars, sc. March, has one distinction, because upon the actual Quæ male creverunt, vescaque parva vocant.

 Vis ea si verbi est ; cur non ego Vejovis ædem 445
 Ædem non magni suspicer esse Jovis ?

nones, Nonis illis, &c. i. e. The nones of March have one distinguishing mark.

428. Vejovis.-is. m. Two etymologies are given for this name, which is compounded either of ve, a particle expressive of diminution, and so signifies a small or infant Jove, infr. 443, or it means a wicked Jove, 'qui non juvandi sed nocendi potestatem haberet;' ve, having the force of non, as in the compounds, vesanus, vecors, &c. in consequence of which his statue is armed with arrows prepared for mischief; he is also frequently identified with Pluto, called Vedius, quasi nocens Dius; Gell. v. 12. It is evident, however, that the poet favours the former. Lucos ante duos. Thus described by Livy; 'locum, qui nunc septus descenditibus (ex Capitolio) inter duos lucos est. Asylum aperit.' So Cicero; 'Assequitur inter lucos hominem Milo,' and Dionysius; Τὸ γὰρ μεταξὺ χωρίον τοῦ τε Καπιτωλίου καὶ τῆς ἄκρας, ὃ καλεῖται νῦν, κατὰ τὴν Ῥωμαίων διαλεκτὸν, μετέριον δυοῖν δρυμῶν.

432. Quam non invidiosa. 'How free from envy or malice;' because they were all of the same stamp and class.

434. Disce, &c. Learn who the deity is, and why he is so called.

440. In solida fixus humo. Rooted in the solid earth.

441. Capra. Amalthea. See Fast. v. 111.

443. Vegrandia, &c. The countrywomen call the corn which has grown indifferently, vegrandia, i. e. non grandia, meagre, and what is small, vesca, i. e. ve, or sine esca, weak, or delicate. So Veflamines, the inferior Flamens.

445. Vis ea si verbi est. If such be the force of the expression.

ORITUR PEGASUS.

JAMQUE, ubi cœruleum vallabunt sidera cœlum,

Suspice : Gorgonei colla videbis equi.

Creditur hic cæsæ gravis cervice Medusæ

Sanguine respersis prosiluisse jubis. 450

Huic supra nubes et subter sidera lapso

Cœlum pro terra, pro pede penna fuit.

Jamque indignanti nova frena receperat ore,

447. Ubi cœruleum. When the stars shall gird the blue vault of heaven.

448. Gorgonei equi. On the nones the constellation Pegasus rises heliacally; so called from πηγή, fons, because born near the springs or sources of the ocean, where the Gorgons dwelt; whence Hyginus and others say, that he was born of Neptune and Medusa. Some, however, with the poet, assert the winged steed to have sprung from the blood of Medusa, whom Perseus slew. He was tamed by Neptune or Minerva, and presented to Bellerophon, to assist him in conquering the Chimæra. According to others, Pegasus was the name of the vessel in which Bellerophon sailed; see also infr. 453. According to Ovid, Metam. iv. 785, Perseus was mounted on Pegasus, when he destroyed the sea monster to which Andromeda should have been sacrificed, but for his protection. See Class. Dic. Andromeda.

449. Gravida cervice. From her pregnant neck; so called because Chrysaor and Pegasus sprung from the blood which flowed from it upon her decapitation by Perseus. Medusa was the daughter of Phorcus and Ceto, a sea monster, and with her sisters, Euryale and Sthenyo, to whom Scylla is added by some, inhabited the islands called Gorgades or Gorgones, whence they derived their name, in the Æthiopian sea. The islands are said to have been so named from their having been infested by a noxious animal called γοργών. Medusa was remarkable for her personal attractions, and particularly distinguished for the beauty and luxuriance of her golden hair, whence Neptune became passionately enamoured of her, and made the temple of Minerva the scene of his successful love. The goddess indignant at the insult, changed Medusa's hair into snakes, and doomed all on whom she should chance to gaze, to death. Perseus, the son of Danaë and Jove, by order of the gods, put on the winged sandals of Mercury, with whose sword, and the brazen shield of Minerva he was armed, and beheaded Medusa while she and her snakes were sleeping. The goddess subsequently wore the Gorgon's head as the device upon her shield.

451. Huic supra, &c. 'The air was as the earth to him, soaring beyond the clouds, and beneath the stars; his pinions were as feet.'

453. Indignant nova frena ore. It is also said that Pegasus was caught by Bellerophon at Pirene, a fountain in Corinth, and that after the destruction of the Chimæra, he attempted, mounted on Pegasus, to reach the skies, in consequence of which Jupiter sent a gadfly, which made him throw Bellerophon, who fell on the Aleian

OCT. ID. MART. ARIADNES CORONA ORITUR.

PROTINUS adspicies venienti nocte Coronam

plain in Cilicia, and wandered about in blindness and poverty until death. Pegasus, ascending to heaven, became a constellation, looking towards the arctic circle, touching with his mouth the head of the Dolphin, and with his neck close to the right hand of Aquarius.

454. Levis Aonias, &c. By striking his hoof upon Mount Helicon, Pegasus opened the fountain thence called Hippocrene, sc. Ἰωκίου κρήνη, the 'fons Caballinus' of Persius, Prolog. Sat. 1, l. That part of Bœotia, in which Helicon stood, was called Aonia, whence Aon. aquas.

456. Quinque decemque. With fifteen stars; according to Hyginus, eighteen

457. Veniente nocte. On the viii. Id. Mart. Coronam Gnosida. The Cretan crown, so called from Gnosus, a city of Crete, where Ariadne, the daughter of Minos and Pasiphaë was born. For Coronam, see infr. 509.

458. Theseo crimine. Owing to the guilt of Theseus, she became a deity. Theseus, son of Æthra, the daughter of Pittheus and Ægeus, was sent to Crete as one of the seven chosen youths, whom, according to a compact with Minos, the Athenians sent yearly to be devoured by the Minotaur. He volunteered this service in order to deliver his country, if possible, from this cruel and tyrannical tribute, and succeeded, by the assistance of Ariadne, who enabled him to track the labyrinth with a clue of thread. He slew the Minotaur, and sailed from Crete, with the six youths, and seven virgins, whom he had saved from being destroyed by the monster, and Ariadne, but forgetful of her kindness, he abandoned her on the island of Chios or Naxos, whither he was driven by stress of weather on his voyage home. The rest of her story is detailed in the text.

459. Perjuro mutarat conjuge Bacchum. An hypallage for perjurum conjugem Baccho, had happily exchanged a perjured consort for Bacchus. So Horace; 'Vellux amœnum sæpe Lucretilem Mutat Lycæo Faunus.' Od. i. 17, l., and 'Cur valle permutem Sabina Divitias operosiores.'

460. Fila legenda. Legere fila, est adducere, et colligere obvolvendo : quod fecisse dicitur Theseus, qui e labyrintho Cretensi, Ariadne monitu, expedit, se, filum in introitu explicando, in reditu colligendo; to gather in or wind up as a clue. Forcel. Pliny speaks of four remarkable labyrinths; (λαβύρινθος, α λαβρος, fovea, vel a λαβεῖν et εἰνᾶν, quodprehendendo decipiat, vel quasi λαβίνθους α λαβῖν θυρας, quod varia ab ingressu aperiuntur, et quasi prehenduntur ostia, nec tamen invenitur exitus) the first and most celebrated was the Egyptian, in Heliopolis, of which the pillars in front were made of Parian marble, and the rest of porphyry. The next was the Cretan, in the city Gortyna, built at the command of Minos by Dædalus, who modelled it from the Egyptian; however, though more intricate, it was not within a hundred times as large. The third is the Lemnian, remarkable for the beauty of its columns, of which it had a hundred and fifty. The last was the Italian, which Porsena, king of Etruria, built as a sepulchre for himself.

461. Sorte tori gaudens. Exulting in the good fortune of her marriage, sc. with Bacchus. Quem flebam rustica. Whom I foolishly deplored. Quid fles at rustica. Al. Quid flebas rustica. Heins.

463. Liber. Bacchus, so called a liberando, because he fought for the freedom of Bæotia, or because he sets the mind free from the effects of care, or from λύειν βαρὺν, curæ pondera solvere. The genealogies of Bacchus are various. According to some, he was the son of Jupiter and Semele, others make Liber and Libera the son and daughter of Ceres. Orpheus, in one of his hymns, describes him as the son of Jupiter and Proserpine, and in another, as the son of the Egyptian Isis. The poets in general adopt the first of these opinions. Semele was the daughter of Cadmus, and of such singular beauty, that she attracted the attention of Jupiter. Having bound him, at the instigation of Juno, by an oath, to accede to her wishes, she demanded that he should appear in his celestial majesty, and was consumed in consequence, being unable to endure the splendour. Her child, of which she had been eight months pregnant, was placed in the thigh of Jove until the suitable time for his birth arrived. Some say that he was saved from the flames by Dirce, a nymph of Achelous. Depexus crinibus.—With his hair trimmed; this may allude, either to his youth or his effeminacy; 'tibi enim inconsumpta juventa est: Tu puer æternus, tu formosissimus alto Conspiceris cælo, tibi, cum sine cornibus adstas, Virgineum caput est.' Ovid. Metam. iv. 15; and Euripides in Bacch. Τὸν θελόμενον ξένον, ὃς εἰσφέρει νόσον Καϊνὴν γυναιξί; &c. or it may refer merely to the beauty of his hair, as; 'Et dignos Baccho, dignos et Apolline crines. Met. iii. 421. Indos vincit. Of all the expeditions of Bacchus, that into the east is the most celebrated. His army consisted of men and women, all inspired with divine fury, and armed with thyrsi, cymbals, &c. His conquests were unstained by bloodshed; he was received as a benefactor, for the instructions which he freely gave the people in the use of the vine, in tilling the earth, and in making honey. He was accompanied by Silenus and Lusus, from whom Lusitania is said to have received its name; and when he had subdued India and Iberia, he made Pan the governor of the latter, who called it Pania, afterwards Hispania. So Sesoth. de reb. Iber. His conquests in the east extended to the Ganges; 'Oriens tibi victus, adusque Decolor extremo qua tingitur India

467. Spatiatæque littore curvo. Wandering on the winding shore.

469. En iterum fluctus, &c. Lo! hear ye waves again a like complaint; Lo! sandy shore, receive again my tears. Similes. Such as she had uttered on her being deserted by Theseus.

471. Dicebam, &c. I remember, I was wont to say, Perjured and faithless Theseus!

474. Nomine mutato. Bacchus instead of Theseus. Relata. Novata. Zulich.

477. Desertis arenis. Of Chios, or, according to others, of Dia, an island in the Cretic Sea, now Standia, from Gr. ἐς τὰν Δίαν.

478. Dedoluisse. Once I could have ceased to grieve; sc. had she died when deserted by Theseus. Of this sense of de in compositions, there are frequent examples; ‘ Optimus ille fuit vindex lædentia pectus Vincula qui rupit dedoluitque semel.’ Ovid de remed.

479. Leviorque tuis frondibus. Lighter, more easily unsettled, than the vine leaves with which he was crowned; whence Virgil; ‘ Foliis tantum ne carmina manda, Ne turbata volent rapidis ludibria ventis.’ Æneid vi. 74, and Coleridge;

‘ There is not wind enough in the air
 To move away the ringlet curl
 From the lovely lady’s cheek—
 There is not wind enough to twirl
 The one red leaf, the last of its clan,
 That dances as often as dance it can,
 Hanging so light and hanging so high,
 On the topmost twig that looks up at the sky.’

According to some mythologies, Pasiphaë intrigued with an officer of her household, Taurus, and became the parent of twins, Minos and Taurus, whence the fable of the Minotaur.

Etrurian general, who assisted Romulus against the Sabines, and received this hill for a settlement, in recompense. See Fast. ii. n. 739.

519. Idibus. On the ides; March 15th. Annæ Perennæ. Anna, the daughter of Belus, and sister of Dido, upon the death of the latter, and the occupation of Carthage by Iarbas king of the Getuli, flying from her native country, took refuge with Battus, king of Melite. She was forced to leave this retreat, in consequence of the threats of her brother Pygmalion, and in her wanderings, chanced to reach the Laurentian shores, where she was kindly received by Æneas. Her sister Dido appeared to her in a dream, and warning her against the jealousy of Lavinia, who was already plotting her destruction, suggested the river Numicus as her only resource, 'Huc rapias, germana, viam tutosque receptus. Te sacra excipient hilares in flumina Nymphæ, Æternumque Italis numen celebrabere in oris.' Sil. Ital. viii. 182. Her story in detail is given in the text. For Perenna, see infr. 656. Festum geniale. The convivial festival.

a place called Annæ Perennæ nemus, between the confluence of the Tiber and Anio and the Milvian bridge. Advena. Because the Tiber rises in Etruria. Et accumbit. Et accumbunt. Heins. Cum pare sua. With his wife.

524. Quibus, &c. Whose leafy dwelling is built up with boughs.

525. Rigidis. Phrygiis. Al.

527. Sole tamen. Notwithstanding the shade they had formed by extending their cloaks upon the upright reeds, and reclining beneath them. Annosque precantur. They implore so many years additional to their existence as they empty cups. Ad numerumque bibunt. Drink by reckoning, 'Quincunces et sex cyathos bessemque bibamus.' Martial. Epign. ii. 36, 'tribus aut novem Miscentur cyathis pocula commodis.' Horat. Od. iii. 19.

529. Invenies illic. 'You will find a man there to drink off the years of Nestor.' He was the son of Neleus and Cloris, and king of Pylus in Elis. In early life he engaged in a war with the Epeans, a people of Peloponnesus in Achaia, and assisted Pirithous against the Centaurs. Finally, in his old age, he accompanied the Grecian chiefs to Troy. He is stated by the poets to have been beyond his two hundredth year at this period ; however they erred in ascribing a hundred years instead of thirty, to a γενεα, or generation, so that his existence may be limited to ninety. Still the ebibat annos of the text, a cup for every year, must be received with some suspicion of its possibility.

530. Quæ sit per calices. A woman who by the number of her cups equalled the years of the Sibyl. Several Sibyllæ are enumerated by the ancient writers ; Plato mentions one, Ælian four, Pliny three, and Varro ten. The most celebrated Sibyl, the same alluded to in the text, belonged to Cumæ in Italy ; and has been variously named, Herophile, Daphne, Manto, Deiphobe, &c. ; but Erythraea is the name by which she was best known. Apollo is said to have been enamoured of her, and to have offered her any boon she might require ; she took up a handful of sand, and wished to live as many years as her hand held grains. Her request was granted, but she forgot, as occurred in the case of Tithonus, to add the enjoyments of life, health, &c. She accordingly became aged and decrepid. Seven hundred years of her life had elapsed at the time when she descended with Æneas to the infernal regions, and six hundred more remained to be fulfilled, after which she became a mere atom, and scarcely discernible but by her voice ; ‘ Usque adeo mutata ferar ; nullique videnda, Voce tamen noscar ; vocem mihi fata relinquent.’ Ovid. Metam. xiv. 152. The Cumæan Sibyl, Erythræa, so called, from Erythræ in Ionia, is said to have been born in Cuma or Cyme, a celebrated city of Æolia, built by Pelops on his return from Greece ; and is to be distinguished from the Sibylla Cumana, who belonged to Cumæ, which is also called Cyme, after Strabo, by Silius Italicus and Statius, an ancient town of Campania, built by a colony of Chalcidians and Cumæans according to some, but its origin is ascribed by the poets to the former alone. This latter was the Sibyl who offered the nine books to Tarquinius Priscus, or according to others, Superbus, for three hundred pieces of gold ; he refused her twice, and each time she burned three, he then purchased the three remaining for the original sum. According to Pliny, xiii. 13. there were but three altogether, of which she burned two. The remainder was preserved with the greatest veneration in the Capitol, in a stone chest which was deposited in a subterranean cell. Two men were appointed by Tarquin, called Duumviri sacrorum for consulting and explaining the Sibylline books, which they opened and interpreted only on great emergencies. They are said to have been burned by Stilicho, a celebrated general under Theodosius the Great, when he rebelled against his successor Honorius ; ‘ Ne tum patriis sævire proditor armis, Sancta Sibyllinæ fata cremavit opis.’ Rutil. ii. 51.

532. Et jactant, &c. And move their pliant hands in time to what they sing. So Lucretius ; ‘ Brachiaque in numerum jactare, et cætera membra.’ ix. 771.

Et ducunt posito duras cratere choreas,

538. Posito cratere. The bowl being laid aside. Duras choreas. The uncouth choirs: duras, is here opposed to faciles, supr. as the result of their excess in drinking, whence also Multaque, &c. ‘And many a fair one dances with dishevelled hair.’

542. Digna relatu pompa. Heinsius conjectures that some lines are wanting here to complete the account of the procession, which it is not likely that the poet would have omitted, from the nature of the subject he had to treat.

544. Dea. Anna Perenna. Quoniam rumoribus errant. Since they vary in their accounts.

545. Fabula. The story is by no means to be passed over in my design.

546. Arserat Æneæ. Compare Virg. Æneid. iv. 504, and Heroid. Ep. vii. where, in fin, the distich Præbuit, &c. infr. occurs.

548. Tumulique in marmore. The tumulus, or mound of earth, was heaped over the vessel containing the ashes, and on this was placed the marmor, Gr. σπίλη, on which was inscribed the epitaph, &c. of the deceased.

552. Numidæ. The Africans, Moors and Getulians, under the conduct of their sovereign, Iarbas, the rejected suitor of Dido, attacked Carthage immediately after her death, by which it was left defenceless, sine vindice.

554. Elissæ. According to Servius, in Æneid. i. 344, this was her real name; she was called Dido after her decease, which in the Punic tongue is synonymous with virago, in compliment to the courage which she evinced in her self-destruction, whereby she avoided the violence with which she was menaced after the treacherous flight of Æneas. ‘Quid moror? an mea Pygmalion dum mœnia frater, Destruat, aut captam ducat Gætulus Iarbas. Others explain Dido to mean πλανήτης, a wanderer.

 be threshed, and thrice the must was stored in the deep casks ;' a periphrasis for three years, the interval between the death of Di-do and the expulsion of her sister.
Mustum, signifies new wine, before it was fermented ; how it is made to express any given time may be explained from Cato, R.R.
 c. 120, 'Mustum si voles totum noting of the flight of years by the recurrence of their customary occupations and effects, has been adopted by poets, and not unfre-quently by orators, in all ages, as calculated to impress the mind more deeply by supplying it with a series of sensible and successive images, than by the expression of a mere interval of time, which is too apt to be disregarded, when unaccompanied by some brief check, as it were, upon the rapid train of thought.

563. Vertice libatas comas. It was customary for the relations of the deceased to throw upon the funeral pile handfuls of hair, along with the perfumes, &c.
Vertice libatas. Offered from the head.

568. Melite. An island in the Libyan sea, between Sicily and Africa, but nearer to the former and allotted to it by the Romans ;
 now Malta. Cosyræ. Called also Cosura, a small, barren island, also between Sicily and Africa, not more than six or seven leagues in length.

571. Battus. A sovereign remarkable for his mildness; 'Mitis Battus, lachrymasque dedisse, Casibus humanis facilis,' Sil. Ital. viii. 58, the son of Polymnestus and Phronime; his real name was Aristoteles, but he received that of Battus in consequence of a hesitation in his speech. He is confounded by some of the poets with Battus, a Lacedæmonian, who built the town of Cyrene, B.C. 630, with a colony from the island of Thera, whereas Dido fled from Phœnicia, upon the murder of her husband, about 953 years B.C.; between which time and that of her death, there was but an inconsiderable interval, so that they cannot be identified.

575. Pygmalionis. King of Tyre, son of Belus, and brother of Dido; remarkable for his cruelty and avarice. He murdered his sister's husband, Sichæus, priest of Hercules, privately in the temple, in order to obtain his wealth; of which Dido having been certified in a dream, fled, and took with her the riches which Pygmalion had vainly sought.

576. Signa. The sun had twice reviewed his signs; i.e. two years had passed, the sun having twice traversed the Zodiac, since she had left Carthage.

578. Frater. Pygmalion.

581. Asperior quovis, &c. So Lear;

'Rumble thy belly full! spit fire! spout rain!
 Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters:

I tax you not, you elements, with unkindness,
 I never gave you kingdoms, call'd you children,

You owe me no subscription.'

SHAKESPEARE

582. Crathidis. A river of Calabria, now Crate or Gratti, which waters Consentia, the capital of the Bruttii, now Cozenza, and is discharged into the Sinus Tarentinus; called Lapidusus, because it rose in the Apennines.

583. Purus. Free from trees. 'Purus ab arboribus spectabilis undique campus' Metam. iii. 709. 'Purus et patens campus.' Liv. xxiv. 14.

586. Dubia librantur ab aura. Flutter in the uncertain breeze.

588. Subducere carbasa. To strike sail. Torto lino. The rope by which the sail was managed.

593. Canas alveus haurit aquas. h.e. navis accipit in se insilientes turbati maris undas, Forcel. Hau-rio, from Gr. ἀρῶω, to draw.

597. Lumina tegit. As if to shut out the sight of danger.

599. Aliquam humum. In opposition to tumidas undas, supr.

601. Expositis omnibus. All having disembarked. 'Socios de puppibus altis Pontibus exponit.' Virg. Æneid, x. 287. Hausta perit. Sinks, swallowed up.

602. Jam regno auctus. 'Jam regni compos.' Sil. Ital. viii. 72. Nataque Latini. Lavinia.

603. Populos duos. Trojan and Latin.

604. Dotali. Received as Lavinia's dower.

608. Anna est. Anna en, Heins.

610. Quo fugiat. In order to avoid the presence of the betrayer and deserter of her deceased sister.

612. Cytherciûs heros. So called from Cythera, now Cerigo, an island on the coast of Laconia in Peloponnesus, sacred to Venus.

617. Meas illos increpuisse moras. See Virg. Æneid, iv. 345, et seq.

620. Ne refer. Remind me not. Adspexi. See Virg. Æneid, vi. 450.

622. Seu ratio, Sive Deus. Whether design or the Deity.

624. Multa tibi, &c. 'Grateful, we owe much to you, every thing to Elissa ; you shall be welcome for your own, welcome for your sister's sake.'

628. Tyrios induta paratus. Clothed in her Tyrian attire ; a robe of purple and gold.

630. Pia causa. 'A righteous cause.' The pious Æneas, however, does not descend to particulars.

634. Falsumque vulnus. The wound of unbelief ; because she doubted his truth.

638. Non tamen exactum. 'It is not certain what she is to do ; she madly hates, and plans her secret snare, and wishes, when revenged, to die.'

642. Et fuge, &c. Heu fuge, ne dubita, funestum, ait, heu fuge tectum. Heims.

643. Sub verbum. Just at the word, the breeze shook the creaking door.

 Et celebrant largo seque diemque mero,
 Sunt quibus hæc Luna est, quia mensibus impleat annum:
 Pars Themis, Inachiam pars putat esse bovem.

644. Humili, &c. From her low window springs upon the plain.

645. Tunica recincta. With her robe untied; expressive of the haste with which she fled. The phrase is used in a similar sense, Orid. Amor. i. 5, 9, and Heroid. Ep. 2, 116, 'Castaque fallaci zona recincta manu.' It may be explained also by succincta, girt, tucked up, to contribute to her speed, but the former is the more correct interpretation.

647. Dama. From Gr. δῆμα. metus, th. δῆδω. It is used as masculine by Virgil, Georg. iii. 539, 'timidi damæ, cervique fugaces,' to avoid, says Servius, an ὁμοιοπύτυον.

648. Corniger. An epithet applied in common, by Greek and Latin writers, to rivers, from the noise and strength of their waters, the winding of their currents, &c. Numicius, a river in Latium.

650. Sidonis—idis. The Sidonian, Anna.

653. Sustinuit tacitas aquas. Stilled its silent waters. Tenues. Zulich.

655. Anne perenne. In a perennial river; whence it would appear she was called, according to the poet, Anna Perenna. A more probable etymology may be collected from vs. 145—6, and 532, supr. and the form of supplication adopted at her festival. 'Ut annare et perennare commode liceret;' Macrob. Saturn. i. 12; 'that it might be allowed them to pass happily the whole year round.'

656. Erratis in agris. In the fields that had formerly been traversed in the search for Anna, or which they traversed in imitation and remembrance of those who sought her.

657. Et celebrant. And they do honour to themselves and to the day, by a profusion of wine, as supr. 533.

658. Sunt quibus, &c. And was confounded sometimes with Luna, because the latter was also perennis, quia mensibus, &c. continuing the whole year round.

659. Themis. According to Hyginus, the daughter of Æther or Jupiter, and Terra, and the goddess who instructed mankind in the established principles of piety and justice, τὰ τεθειμένα;

Invenies, qui te Nymphen Atlantida dicant ; 660

Teque Jovi primos, Anna, dedisse cibos.

Hæc quoque, quam referam, nostras pervenit ad auras

Fama: nec a vera dissidet illa fide.

Plebs vetus, et nullis etiamnum tuta Tribunis, she had a temple and an oracle in Bœotia near the Cephissus, and from her Deucalion received the counsel by which he repeopled the earth after the deluge. The-min is the Greek accus. as Nymphen, infr. Inachiam bovem. Io, daughter of Inachus, king of the Argives, and priestess of Juno, was changed into a heifer by Jupiter, whose affections she had gained, in order that she might be enabled to elude the jealousy of his wife. She could not however, escape the vigilance or the vengeance of Juno, and after severe persecution, and many wanderings, she arrived in Egypt, where she prayed to Jupiter to restore her to her original form. Afterwards she married Osiris, king of Egypt, and treated her subjects with such lenity, that she received divine honours after her decease, under the name of Isis.

660. Nymphen Atlantida. Some identified her with a nymph, one of the daughters of Atlas, said to have attended Jove in his infancy.

662. Hæc quoque. The poet assigns another reason for the celebration of the festival in honour of Anna Perenna.

664. Nullis etiamnum tuta Tribunis. The disputes between the Patricians and Plebeians, on account of the persecution and bondage to which the latter were subjected from their insolvency, 'propter nexos ob æs alienum,' Liv. i. 23, led to their subsequent secession from Rome, at the instigation of Sicinius, to Mons Sacer, three miles distant from the city, A.U. 250. Before they could be prevailed on to return, they agreed for a remission of debts for such as were unable to pay; liberty for those who had been enslaved by their creditors, nexi; and that they should be allowed to appoint magistrates of their own, to protect their rights, whose persons should be inviolable, sacrosancti; Liv. iii. 33, 65; Dionys. vi. 89; they were called Tribunes, either from Tribunus, the commander of a tribe, so called by Romulus, φύλαρχος vel πριτυαρχος, Dionys. ii. 7, or because they were elected tribuum suffragio, Forcel. or according to Varro, because they were chosen from amongst the military tribunes. In the nature and duties of their office, they resembled the Spartan Ephori. Their great power consisted in the negative voice, intercessio, which they were privileged to exercise upon the proceedings of the senate and magistrates, whose laws, decrees, &c. were valueless, unless stamped with the T, the token of the Tribunes' sanction. They were at first two in number, created at the Curiata Comitia, who chose, according to Livy, ii. 33, three colleagues. They were elected for the first time at the Comitia Tributa, A.U. 283; and A.U. 297, ten were created, Liv. iii. 30, two from each class, to which number they subsequently adhered. The first encroachment upon their almost unlimited power, was made by L. Sylla, who was indignant at their having espoused the cause of C. Marius in the civil wars ; he deprived them of every privilege except that of intercession. After Sylla's death, their authority was fully restored, but only to be abused ; for they became the mere venal instruments of the ambitious and the turbulent. Julius Cæsar found them eminently serviceable in promoting his designs while in progress, but when he had attained his object, he reduced them to a mere name, and deprived them of their office at will ; 'potestate privavit,' Suet. Jul. 78. Augustus managed to have the tribunitian power solely vested in himself, and made ample use of all the advantages which it had at any time possessed. It empowered him to convene the senate ; assemble the people ; decide upon all appeals, and rendered his person sacred and inviolable. Succeeding emperors continued to turn this power to good account, and although the tribunes were still elected, their influence was utterly gone ; 'in anem umbram, et sine honore nomen.' Plin. Ep. i. 23. They were finally abolished altogether, along with some other ancient offices, by Constantine.

For the return of the people to the city, upon the quaint counsel of Menenius Agrippa, see Liv. ii. 32.

668. Bovillis. An old town of Latium, on the Appian way, so called, a bove, from an ox which escaped from an altar on the Alban Mount, where it was about to be sacrificed, and was caught upon the site of this town ; or, according to others, from hile, i. e. intestina, because the ox had been first wounded by the knife of the priest, and fled as far as the town, with its entrails protruded, thence called Bohillæ, id. quod Bovillæ, Non. Marcell. 11 ; called suburbanas, merely from its vicinity to Rome, or probably to distinguish it from a town of the same name in Campania, near Sinuessa. It was not a town of any note, whence Persius ; 'Accedo Bovillas, Clivumque ad Virbi.' Sat. vi. 55.

670. Levi mitra. With a light turban ; Scaliger, in Copam Virgilii, says that the mitra was peculiar to old women, whence he infers that Copa should be classed amongst them ; 'Copa Syrisca, caput Graia redimita mitella, &c. Virg. Opusc. Copa ; see Fast. iv. 491. Mitra, from Gr. μίτρος, licium, was a species of head-dress common to the Persians, Egyptians, &c.

674. Perennæ. Probably in sign of her being perennis, never failing, from the help she afforded them in their exigency, sibi defectis.

676. Præteriturus eram The poet was about to omit mentioning the assassination of Cæsar on the ides of March, when he was reminded by Vesta.

678. Meus fuit ille sacerdos. By virtue of his having been Pontifex Maximus, on whom it was particularly incumbent to take charge of the sacred rites of Vesta ; supr. n. 144. in med. and 415.

679. Me petiere. Aimed at me ; because they disregarded the sanctity of her priest.

680. Simulacraque nuda His mere semblance, or external form, because Cæsar himself was carried up to heaven by Vesta, Ipsa virum rapui.

682. Atria servat. Servo is used poetically to signify to dwell in or inhabit, as supr. and Virg. Æneid. vii. 52, ‘ tantas servabat filia sedes.’ Georg. iv. 383, ‘ Nymphæ, Centum quæ silvas et flumina servant.’

683. Magno Foro. The chief of all the Fora, called κατ’ ἑξοχὴν, Romanum, Magnum, or Vetus ; where three years after Cæsar’s death, u. c. 712, a temple was consecrated to him.

684. Nefas. Because he was Pontif. Max. Prohibente Deorum numine. The death of Cæsar is said to have been preceded by strange and numerous prodigies.

According to Strabo, a vast flame seemed to issue from the hand of a soldier’s servant without doing him any mischief : when Cæsar was sacrificing, the victim was found to have no heart, which was believed to be sometimes wanting, (though it was known that an animal could not live without one, Cic. Divin. ii. 16,) and when such was the case, it was interpreted as an evil omen ; whence the Haruspex Spurinna warned Cæsar ‘ to beware the ides of March ;’ extraordinary noises were heard in the night ; strange birds flew into the forum, and lights, with armies engaged in battle, were seen in the air ; thus commented upon by Casca :

‘ Either there is a civil strife in heaven,
Or else the world, too saucy with the gods,
Incenses them to send destruction—
When these prodigies
Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,
These are their reasons—they are natural ;
For, I believe, they are portentous things,
Upon the climate that they point upon.’

SHAKSP. JUL. CÆS.

The portents which are said to have immediately succeeded his decease, are detailed at length. Georg. i. 466.

686. Morte jacent merita. This alludes to Brutus and Cassius particularly ; but it is said of the conspirators generally, that not one of them survived Cæsar three years. Philippi. A city of Macedonia, on the confines of Thrace, at the foot of Mount Pangæus, and close to the Ægean sea. It was anciently called Datois, but having been fortified by Philip of Macedon, against the incursions of the Thracian barbarians, it received the name by which it is celebrated in history. It was here that Brutus and Cassius were defeated by Augustus and Antony, in consequence of which Cassius commanded one of his own freed men to dispatch him, and Brutus shortly after fell by his own hand.

688. Prima elementa Cæsaris. The earliest lesson of Augustus Cæsar.

690. Postera aurora. xvii. Kal. April. March 16th.

691. Scorprios. One of the twelve signs of the Zodiac, consisting of one and twenty stars, between Libra and Sagittarius ; from its great size it was said to occupy the room of two signs, whence its claws chelæ, were confounded with Libra ; ' Est locus in geminis ubi brachia contrahit ardens Scorprios, et cauda, flexisque utrinque lacertis, Porrigit in spatium signorum membra duorum.' Ovid. Metam. ii. 195. Some of the ancients, in consequence, did not acknowledge Libra at all, and reckoned, like the Chaldeans, but eleven signs in the Zodiac ; the Chaldeans divided the ecliptic unequally, appointing twenty degrees to some of the signs, and forty to others ; the Egyptians, who reckoned twelve signs, allotting thirty degrees to each. According to Hyginus, Poet. Astron. ii. 26, when Orion boasted of his prowess as a hunter, Tellus, indignant at his vaunting, sent a scorpion to sting him, in consequence of which he died. Jupiter raised the scorpion to the skies, as a lesson to the vain-glory of mankind ; at the entreaty of Diana the same honour was bestowed upon Orion, on condition that he should set, in token of fear, when the scorpion rose. A Prima parte. The fore part will be visible, the rest having set.

692 Tertia post Idus. The commentators generally suppose the poet to have committed an error here, since it is certain that the festival of Minerva was held xiv. Kal. April, and as one day, xv. Kal. April, only, infr. 783, intervened between it and the Liberalia, the latter should take place xvi. Kal. April, which they reckon as the second day after the ides, and not as in the text, Tertia, &c. It is, however, not unusual with the poet to include the day from which he reckons, as for example, Fast. II. N. 449, by which the difficulty is cleared at once, the tertia post idus being explained as the XVI. Kal. April, March 17th.

694. Semelen. See supr. 449.

695. Parvus inermis eras. Parvus inermis eras. Heins.

697. Expletum. Perfected.

698. Sithonas. A people of Thrace, subdued by Bacchus.

700. Thebanæ mala præda matris. Pentheus, king of Thebes, son of Echion, who was torn in pieces by his mother Agave, and her sisters Ino and Autonoe, for his contempt of the orgies of Bacchus, which he forbade his subjects, on pain of death, to celebrate. Ovid. Metam. iii.

701. Lycurge. Son of Dryas, king of Thrace; he denied the divinity of Bacchus, and banished him from his kingdom, for which he was punished by the gods with a fit of insanity, during which he put his wife and son to death, and cut off his own legs, mistaking them for vine-branches, whence inque tuum acte genu. He was murdered by his subjects, who were informed by an oracle that they should not taste any wine until Lycurgus was slain. Others say that he was torn in pieces by panthers, sacred to Bacchus, because he set out on his Indian expedition clothed in panthers' skins, on Rhodope, a mountain of Thrace. The Abbé Banier infers from this and similar fables, connected with Bacchus, which are detailed at length in the third and fourth books of the Metamorphoses, that the worship of this deity met with great opposition in Greece, and his ministers were obliged in consequence to work upon that material, which is scarcely ever found to fail the mischievous and designing, ignorance and superstition.

702. Subitos pisces. It is said that some Tuscan sailors found Bacchus one day asleep after a fit of drunkenness, and that they carried him on board their vessel to sell him as a slave. The god growing sober, and finding that they were not steering towards Naxos, where they promised to land him, transformed them into dolphins. According to Bochart, this fable arose from the wreck of a Tuscan merchantman off Naxos, whose prow was carved like a dolphin, or the fish called tursio, a porpoise or sea-hog, and whose crew having treated Bacchus and his worship with contempt, was punished accordingly.

705. Vilis anus. The poet proceeds to account for this custom observed at the Festival of Bacchus, when old women carried about cakes of their own manufacture, sua liba, which they invited the people to buy, and made an offering for the purchaser, by placing a fragment of the cake on the altar. Vitisator populus, &c. The noise of brazen vessels is still in use, to induce swarms of bees to settle; Aristotle doubts whether they hear it at all, or if so, to what the effect produced by the noise is owing; "Εστι μίντοι ἄδην ὁλως εἴτε ἀκούουσιν, εἴτε μὴν καὶ πότερον ἢ δι' ἡδονὴν τοῦτο ποιῶσιν ἢ διὰ φόβον. 750. Toga libera. So called, because when it was assumed, the restraint of masters, see infr. 752, ceased, ‘totaque impune Suburra Permisit sparsisse oculos jam candidus umbo.’ Pers. Sat. 5, 32, called also pura, because it was perfectly white, and virilis, significant of the age at which the toga prætexta, the gown worn by young men until seventeen years old, was changed. The ceremony of changing the toga was performed with great solemnity, in presence of the Lares; ‘ante deos libera sumpta toga.’ Propert. iv. 132, and upon this occasion the bullæ also, a hollow golden ball, or boss, either in the shape of a heart, or with a heart engraved upon it, worn round the neck in boyhood, was hung up in honour of these deities; ‘bullæ rudi dimissa est aurea collo.’ Propert. ibid. ‘Cum primum pavidus custos mihi purpura cessit, Bullæque succinctis laribus donata pependit.’ Pers. Sat. 5, 30. Upon assuming the toga virilis, the young men went immediately to the Capitol, or some of the temples, to pray to the gods: they were then conducted to the Forum, accompanied by their friends, whose attendance upon this occasion was called officium solenne togæ virilis, and there recommended some eminent orator whom they should study to imitate, whence they were said forum attingere, or in forum venire, when they began to attend public business; to this probably Horace alludes; ‘sive jubebat Ut facerem quid, Habes auctorem quo facias hoc; Unum ex iudicibus selectis objiciet at.’ Sat. i. 4, 122.

751. Lucifero tuo. On the day of your festival. This was called also Dies togæ virilis, Suet. Aug. 66, or Dies tirocinii, Suet. Tib. 54, and the conducting of the young men to the forum, tirocinium, from tirones, a name given to young soldiers when they first began to serve in the army. Cic. Phil. xi. 15, whence tiro signifies a learner or novice. Candide. sc. ‘aperit præcordia Liber.’

765. Tædifera Dea. Ceres, so called because she lighted two torches at Mount Ætna, to continue by night her search through Sicily for her daughter Proserpine, who had been carried away by Pluto, while gathering flowers in the plains of Enna ; hence δαδούχοι, the name given to her priests, because they carried torches at her festival ; see also Class. Dic. Eleusinia, for the attendants of the Hierophant, δαδούχοις, κηρυῖς, &c. By nunc habet ipse, is to be understood that formerly upon this day the festival of Bacchus only was held, when Luce sua, &c. supr. ; but subsequently the Cerealia, or festival of Ceres, was celebrated conjointly with that of Bacchus, and not without reason, as they represented the harvest and the vintage, which were justly considered as inseparable as they were important.

See Fast. v. 565. Sua pagina. This must either allude to an account of the Argei, contained in the books of the Fasti which have been lost, or it must be interpreted, 'Their own history, or records.' It cannot refer to the Argei mentioned in book v. which all the authorities of any consequence unite in describing as distinct from the places mentioned above; Varro, for example, affirming that these Argei were scattered through the city, whereas the ceremony detailed in book v. should be limited to the Pons Sublicius, whence they flung the Argei, figures stuffed with straw, into the river.

your with Jupiter again, when by the advice of Thetis he was summoned from the infernal regions to assist Jove against Pallas, Juno, and others of the deities who had conspired against him. Iliad, i. 401. Adamante, from Gr. a non, and δαμάζω, domo, properly a diamond, but used frequently, as in the text, to signify any very hard substance.

786. Attulit illi Miluus. And thus prevented the oracle's being fulfilled in favour of Briareus.

788. Una dies media est. One day intervenes, sc. xv. Kal. Aprl. and on the xiv. Kal. April, March 19th, the festival of Minerva was celebrated.

789. Nominaque, &c. According to the poet, the festival of Minerva was called Quinquatria, because it lasted for five days, quinque dies, in succession, on the first of which the sacrifices were offered, and the four remaining were devoted to gladiatorial shows. Others assert the shows to have taken place on the second, third, and fourth days, and the fifth day to have been appointed for the purification of the city, whence, Quinquatria, a quinquando, i. e. lustrando. Varro and Festus account for the name in consequence of the festival having fallen on the fifth day from the ides, (i. e. including the ides, as has been already observed,) in the same way that the Tuscan festivals were called Triatrus, Sexatrus, Septimatrus, or Septenatrus, and with the Falisci, Decimatrus, according as they occurred on the third, sixth, seventh, or tenth day from the ides. Varro further asserts that the Quinquatria lasted but one day, in which he is joined by Festus, who adds that it is alike incorrect to allow five days to the Quinquatria, as three to the Saturnalia or Compitalia, for they took up but one day each. He also differs from the poet, who makes the xiv. Kal. April, the birth-day of Minerva, and therefore appointed for her festival, asserting that it was in consequence of a temple having been upon this day consecrated to her on Mount Aventine. It is said that an interchange of gifts took place between friends at this time, and that matrons waited upon their maids, as masters did upon their slaves at the Saturnalia. By some writers the Quinquatria are identified with the Panathenæa, festivals in honour of Minerva at Athens, first instituted by Erectheus or Orpheus, and called Athenæa, and renewed by Theseus, who caused them to be celebrated by all the tribes of Athens, whom he had united, thence called Panathenæa. Like the Quinquatria, they were also divided into greater Panathenæa, and lesser, μέγαρα and μικρά, and held at different periods of the year. For the Quinquatrus Minores, see Fast. vi. 593.

790. Nec fas concurrere ferro. Gladiators were not permitted on the first day of the festival, for the reason in the text. They were first publicly exhibited at Rome by two brothers, called Bruti, at their father's funeral ; A.U. 490, Liv. xvi. Valer. Max. ii. 4, 7, and for a time they were confined to such occasions ; but subsequently they were exhibited by the magistrates for the entertainment of the people ; 'Munera nunc edunt et verso pollice vulgi, Quem libet occidunt populariter.' Juvenal. 3, 46, chiefly at the Saturnalia and Quinquatria.

792. Altera, tresque. The second and three, sc. four. Super strata arena. The place where the gladiators fought was called arena, because it was sprinkled, strata, with sand or saw-dust, to prevent their slipping and to absorb the blood ; and the combatants Arenarii. Arena is sometimes used to signify the whole amphitheatre.

794. Ornate. Celebrate ; during the Quinquatria, there were contests for prizes in poetry and oratory ; whence Juvenal ; 'Eloquium ac famam Demosthenis aut Ciceronis incipit optare, et totis Quinquatribus optat, Quisquis adhuc uno partam colit asse Minervam,' Sat. 10, 113.

795. Placarit Pallada. Shall have propitiated Pallas.

796. Lanam mollite. Comb the wool.

797. Exonerare colos. h.e. nendo colus pensum detrahare, Forcel. to relieve, by spinning, the distaff of its weight of wool or flax.

798. Stantes telas. sc. Stamina ; see Fast. ii. n. 653, in fin. Hence the recta. Gr. ὀρθὴ ἑστῆς, a tunic wrought by one standing upright. Forcel. ; parents used to present such to their sons, as being ominous of good. Regilla, dimin. of recta. Radio percurrere To cross with the shuttle.

799. Rarum pectine denset opus. Closes with the slay the open work. Pecten, the slay of a weaver's loom, resembles a comb, through the teeth of which the threads of the stamen, the warp or chain, pass ; when the woof subtemen, runs with the shuttle, across the stamen, the successive transverse threads are made to close upon each other by the action of the pecten.

800. Qui maculas, &c. Addressing the fullers, and in the next line the dyers, veleribus quisquis, &c. Athena, the brazen vessels, in which the dye stuff was prepared.

803. Tychio. A celebrated artificer of Hyle in Bœotia, who made the shield of Ajax; ἡλέχτειον, ἑπταβόειον, ὃ οἱ Τυχίος κάμει πύλων; Iliad, vii. 219. The poet appears to have come to a rather hasty conclusion upon the meaning of Σκυτοτόμων ὅχ' ἄριστος. Ibid. when he would interpret what upon consideration would seem to imply the repute of Tychius as an armourer, merely as a eulogy upon his distinction as a cobbler.

804. Manibus. In mechanical work. Epeo. Son of Panopeus, and the builder of the wooden horse in which the Grecians were concealed when it was drawn into Troy, 'ipse doli fabricator Epeos,' Virg. Æneid, ii. 264.

805. Mancus. Incompetent ; chiefly applied to one who has lost the use of a hand ; 'Mancus et extincta corpus non utile dextra.' Juvenal, 3, 48.

806. Phæbea arte. The medical art, of which Apollo was patron.

808. Nec vos, &c. 'Neither do you, crowd of stern masters, cheated of your dues, despise her ; she brings you new pupils.' It is right to mention that the above line, Nec vos, &c. has occasioned great perplexity to the commentators, by whom it has been considerably tortured. The reading in the text has been adopted as the most simple and obvious ; a parallel to feri magistri ; with which turba is in apposition ; occurs, Horat. Ep. ii. 1, 79, 'Memini quæ plagosum mihi parvo Orbilium dictare,' and to censu fraudata, in Juvenal, 7, 228, 'Rara tamen merces, quæ cognitione tribuni Non egeat—' præced. et seq. By the census is to be understood the minerval, the teacher's fee, or entrance money, so called either because an image of Minerva was set up in the schools, over which, as the goddess of wisdom, she was supposed to preside, or because this was the particular period at which it was paid ; whence an accession of pupils would be an object to the master, discipulos, &c. It is to be supposed that the sum was not very considerable ; 'Quisquis adhuc uno partam colit asse Minervam.' Juvenal, Sat. 10, 116, and, 'cum se verterit annus, accipe, victori populus quod postulat, aurum.' Id. Sat. 8, 242.

810. Quique moves cælum. The engraver ; cælum, an instrument to cut or engrave with, a tool used in carving or graving ; a style, burin, or chisel ; Gr. γλυφεῖον, ἐγκοπιεὺς ; th. κοίλος, cavus or cælatus. Tabulamque coloribus uris. Explained correctly by the French commentator, travailler en émail, to enamel, or variegate with colors fixed by fire.

811. Quique facis, &c. ‘ And you who mould, facis mollia, the marble with a master hand,’ sc. the sculptor: ‘ vivos ducent de marmore vultus,’ Virg. Æneid, vi. 848. Possibly the poet may allude to that perfection in the art which made Pygmalion enamoured of his own creation ;

‘ A very virgin in her face was seen,
And had she mov’d, a living maid had been :

One would have thought she could have

With modesty, and was ashamed to move.

816. Captæ Minervæ. The poet proceeds to detail the probable origin of this title, and it must be confessed his conjectures are none of the happiest. The commentators, with their usual subtlety, propose various readings ;

amongst the rest, castæ, although it is quite evident that captæ was the difficulty that struck the poet himself, from his attempts at explaining it. According to Festus a place which was, legitime constitutus, ordained in due form, for sacrifices, was called captus locus, a consecrated spot ; whence captæ delubra Minervæ, may be interpreted, the temple of the consecrated Minerva, or it may be used for capta delubra, Min. the hallowed shrine of Minerva.

817. Quæ Dea, &c. This temple was consecrated on Minerva’s birth-day.

827. Pro Ducibus nostris. Tiberius and Germanicus. Ægida. The shield of Minerva, so called from Gr. αἰγίς, pellis caprina, because it was covered with the skin of the goat Amalthea, that suckled Jupiter. It is sometimes used like lorica, to signify a breastplate, or coat of mail ; ‘ Ut pariter pectus positamque in pectore forti Ægida concuteret ;’ Ovid. Metam. ii. 753, de Pallade. In the passage, ‘ Credunt se vidisse Jovem, cum sæpe nigrantem Ægida concuteret dextra, nimbosque ciceret.’ Virg. Æneid, viii. 354, it is argued by some that ægida signifies a storm, and that it is derived in this sense from αἰγίζω, impetu fero, which comes from αἰγίς, procella, th. ἀΐσσω, ruo ; also that if it was a shield, it would not be said concuteret dextra, and further that Apuleius, De Mund. uses catægis, in a similar sense ; this, however, is opposed by others, who read dextra with nimbosque ciceret. In this shield was set the Gorgon’s head. Ægida, the Gr. accus.

828. Summa dies, &c. The last day of the five was devoted to the Tubilustrium, or purification of the trumpets used in the sacred rites. On this occasion a lamb was sacrificed in a place called Atrium Sutorium, which apparently means the hall of shoemakers, or tanners, but where or what it really was, does not appear : Panvinus, in his description of the city, merely mentions its name. The Tubilustrium was celebrated a second time on the x. Kal. Jun.

which they went was sacred to Mars, and guarded by a dragon, which was found by Cadmus when he went to search for them, feeding on the bodies of his associates. He attacked, and overcame the dragon, with the assistance of Minerva, and sowed its teeth in the plain. Armed men immediately sprung from the ground, who fought until they had all fallen but five, with whose assistance Cadmus built the city, thence called Draconigenam. Draconigenum, Scalig. Draconigeram. Al.

of the sea, Neptune, who changed her into a nymph.

854. Littoribus tactis. The ram upon landing, was changed into a constellation, Phryxus, however, brought the fleece to Colchis, whose sovereign Æetes gave him his daughter Chalciope in marriage, and some time after had Phryxus put to death, in order that he might secure the fleece for himself. Hence arose the famous Argonautic expedition under the conduct of Jason.

'When the coming morn, veniens Eos, shall have sent its herald thrice, the morning star, tres Luciferos ;' lit. three morning stars, which precede the dawn, whence præmiserit. The third day after the festival of Minerva, XI. Kal. April, March 22d, according to the poet was the vernal equinox, Tempora nocturnis, &c. ; in the ancient calendar it is marked VIII. Kal. Ap. March 25th.

860. Janus adorandus. On the VI. Kal. April, the joint festival of Janus, Concord, Safety, and Peace, was celebrated, being, according to the old calendar, the anniversary of the conquest of Alexandria by Julius Cæsar.

— Concordia. There were several temples of Concord in Rome. The first and most remarkable, close to the Capitol, was begun, agreeably to a vow made by Camillus, on the occasion of his having quelled a popular disturbance ; finished by Livia, Fast. vi. 579, and consecrated by Tiberius. Salus. A goddess, daughter of Æsculapius ; her temple was built and dedicated, on the top of the Quirinal hill, by C. Junius Bubulcus. Araque Pacis. See Fast. i. 645. The object in classing these deities together is easily apparent from their character and offices.

863. Aven. Luna colenda jugo. A temple was built upon Mount Aventine during the reign of Servius Tullius, to Diana or Luna.

F A S T O R U M,
 LIBER IV.

ALMA, fave vati, geminorum mater Amorum.

Ad vatem vultus rettulit illa suos.

Quid tibi, ait, mecum? certè majora canebas:

Num vetus in molli pectore vulnus habes?

1. Alma mater. The poet commences the following book with an invocation to Venus, to whom the month of April was considered sacred. Geminorum Amorum, i. e. Cupidinum: some of the poets speak of a plurality of Cupids, Horat. Od. i. 12, 1, Mater sæva Cupidinum, and Orph. Hymn. Ὑμνέομεν σπειρήν πολυώνυμον Ἀφρογενεῖς, Καὶ πηγὴν μεγάλην βασιλῆιον, ἧς ἀπὸ πάντες Ἀθανάτοι πτερόεντες ἀνεβλάστησαν Ἔρωτες. Cicero, De nat. deor. iii. 23, mentions three; the first the son of Diana and Mercury, and the second of Venus and Mercury, and the third, Anteros, (Amori par aut æque venustus ac Amor, quia præpositio ἀντι etiam iastar significat; Forcel.) the son of Venus and Mars. Other writers speak of two only, the celestial, cælestis, the son of Venus and Jupiter, and the terrestrial, vulgaris, the son of Erebus and Nox, who are further distinguished, as honestus and turpis, in which latter sense some understand Anteros, as the opposite of Eros. Plato, in Sym-

pos. mentions the twin Cupids as supr.—Ἀναγκαῖον δὲ δὴ καὶ Ἔρωτα τὸν μὲν τῇ ἑτέρᾳ συνεργον, πάνδημον, vulgarem, ὁρθῶς καλεῖσθαι, τὸν δὲ οὐράνιον, cælestem; Orpheus, also, in one of his hymns, uses the term διφυῆ in reference to Cupid; so Seneca, in Ædip. v. 500, 'Concutit tædas geminus Cupido;' where both the celestial and terrestrial are suitably introduced at the marriage of Bacchus, a deity, with Ariadne, a mortal. They are sometimes distinguished as Cupido, an inordinate, as opposed to Amor, a well regulated affection; 'Amabit sapiens, cupient ceteri;' Afran. apud Non. c. 5, n. 1, 'Cupido te conficit ane amor?' Plaut. in fragm. ibid. 'Quo Venus Cupidoque imperat, suadetque Amor; Id. in Curcul. 1, 1, 3, upon which Servius, ad Æneid. iv. 494, 'Dicendo imperat, violentiam ostendit; Suadet addendo, moderationem significat.' Founded as the polytheism of the ancients was, in a great degree, upon the deifying, if it may be so called, of the human feelings and passions to which severally were assigned their representative gods, it is a matter of little wonder that two or more Cupids were considered necessary to define the various gradations of love.

5. Scis, Dea. Scin, Dea? Heins. Sic, Voss. Arondel.

10. Nunc teritur, &c. A common metaphor with the poets, whence Juvenal; 'Cur tamen hoc potius libeat decurrere campo, Per quem magnus equos Auruncæ flexit alumnus.' Sat. 1, 19, 20.

11. Tempora, &c. So Fast. i. 12.

15. Myrto. This tree was sacred to Venus, because, according to Servius, ad Eclog. Virg. 7, 62, she concealed herself in a myrtle when she first rose from the sea, that none might behold her naked; this differs slightly from the poet's account, infr. 141. A temple was built under the Aventine hill to Venus Myrtea, called also Murcia, from myrtus. Servius, ad Georg. ii. 64. assigns two other causes for the consecration of the myrtle to Venus, one because it flourishes best by the sea side, 'Amantes littora myrtus,' and 'Littora myrtetis gratissima,' Georgs. iv. and ii.; and the other, because it was prized for its medicinal properties in the diseases of women.

20. In Aprili. Because the Julian family into which Germanicus had been adopted, (whence adoptiva nobilitate, infr.) had descended from Venus.

21. Magnâ imagine. In allusion to the jus imaginum, the privilege enjoyed by the patrician families, of possessing images of their ancestors in proof of their noble descent.

23. Iliades. Romulus, the son of Ilia. Longum annum. Simply, the extended year.

28. Alterius mensis. Of the second month.

30. Cognatos Deos. Venus and Jupiter.

31. Dardanon, &c. Dardanus, the son of Jove and Electra the daughter of Atlas, setting out from Coritus, a city of Etruria, or according to others, from Phe-neus in Arcadia, or from Crete, arrived first at Samothrace with his brother Jasius, where they divided their household gods between them and Dardanus, taking the Palladium, passed over into Phrygia, where he founded Troy. He there married Batia, or Astioche, the daughter of Teucer, by whom he had Erichthonius, &c. Dardanon, Gr. accus. as Electran and Anchisen, infr. Nesciret, sc.

38. Altera sacra. ‘A second pious charge ;’ or the phrase may be used in allusion to the divine honours paid to Anchises by his son ; see Virg. Æneid, v. 45, et seq.

40. Unde, &c. Whence the connexion arises between the Julian family and their Trojan progenitors.

41. Postumus. The son, according to Virgil, of Æneas.

43. Isque, Latine. Virgil and others make Latinus the son of Æneas Sylvius, and grandson of Sylvius Postumus, whence it has been conjectured that a couplet is wanting in the text. As the poet differs in some degree from Livy and Eusebius, it may not be amiss to contrast the genealogies according to their respective authorities :

— Subit. Succeeds.

44. Proximus titulis tuis. 'Succeeds to your dignity,' sc. as sovereign; titulus, dimin. of titus, Gr. τιτὸς, th. τιω honoro, Forcel. or from tucor, Fest.

45. Capyi. The eighth king of the Albans, who reigned for twenty-eight years; the son of Epitos, according to the poet; Livy makes him the son of Atys, and Eusebius of Sylvius Athis. Recidiva vocabula Trojæ, 'the restored title of Troy,' i.e. the revived sovereignty of the Trojan kings, amongst whom appears a namesake of the present Capys, supr. v. 34; recidiva is a term in frequent use with Virgil, Æneid. iv. 344, vii. 322, x. 58, where it is taken by Servius and other commentators in the sense ascribed to it above; Servius seems to derive it from recido, re, and cado, which the quantity of the second syllable in the word itself cannot admit of, nor indeed the sense of the verb; recido, re and cado, is frequently used in the sense of redire, recurere, to return, or recur, and so furnishes the best etymology of the term in question, which in its literal meaning is applied to the shoots which emanate from a bough after pruning, or the springing of the seed after it has been sown. Some propose to read rediviva, which is, however, properly applied to a revival of what has been completely extinct, whereas recidiva means the restoring of what had merely undergone a temporary suspension, such as the regal power of Æneas was subject to during his wanderings for seven years, until his final establishment as sovereign of Latium.

49. Agrippan. Called Acrotas, Metam. xiv. 617, where this genealogy also occurs.

52. Procæ. The successor of Aventinus; he reigned twenty-three years.

53. Diri Amuli. So called in consequence of his unjust usurpation of his brother's kingdom, and his cruelty to Ilia and her offspring.

54. Lauso. Called by Dionysius, Ægestus, and by Plutarch, Ainitus.

55. Ense patruo. sc. ense patroi ; this form of expression is common to Greek and Latin writers ; so Homer uses παισιγενήτων φόνον, fraternam cædem. Patrio, Petav.

58. Emeruit. 'He deserved to gain credit for the assertion ;' sc. from his character and exploits.

60. Tempora continuata. 'Successive months,' March and April. Dis generis. 'To the gods of his race ;' the remote and immediate, Venus and Mars.

61. Graio sermone. According to the poet the month Aprilis is derived, qu. Aphrilis, from Gr. ἀφρός, spuma maris, in compliment to Venus, who was hence called Ἀφροδίτη, a spumis, &c. infr. Yet the etymology proposed, infr. v. 89, though less suited to the purposes of the poet, is approved by Macrobius and Varro, who assert the name of Venus, either in Latin or Greek, to have been unknown to the Romans under the kings. Scaliger derives Aprilis from Aper, because it was customary to sacrifice a boar-pig in this month ; in like manner as the Greek month Ἐλαφε-βελιών is derived from ἐλαφεῖ, cervus.

63. Nec tibi. The poet endeavours to show how an old Latin name might have been originally derived from the Greek.

64. Græcia major. To what portion of Italy this name was applied, and for what reason, geographers are not agreed. The poet appears to include all Italy under this appellation ; according to some it is applied to that part of Italy which is opposite to Greece and Sicily, others ascribe the title to that region which was occupied by the Greek colonists. Pliny ascribes to the vanity of the Greeks its having been called Magna ; Strabo comprises Sicily under the head of Mag. Græcia, whence the epithet may have been used. According to others it was called Magna, in reference to its advantages of soil and climate over the country which the colonists had abandoned. The poet subjoins a list of the early settlers in Italy.

65. Venerat Evander. See Fast. i. 427.

68. Albula. So called at the period of the arrival of Hercules in Latium ; see Fast. ii. s. 299.

69. Dux Neritius. Ulysses, so called from Neritos, which Virgil, Æneid, iii. 270, and Mela, lib. ii. c. 7, appear to have considered as an island distinct from, but adjoining to Ithaca, of which, according to Servius, Neritos is a mountain. It formed a part of Laertes' kingdom, 'Laertia regna,' Virg. in loc. supr. Some copies read Naritius, from Νῆριτος, the Doric form of Νήριτος. Læstrygones. A people of Italy near Formiæ, of Scythian origin; they were a race of cannibals, thence called Anthropophagi; testes exstant, 'are witnesses,' sc. to Ulysses having arrived at the Italian shore, some of his companions having been devoured by the Læstrygones, while he narrowly escaped a similar fate himself. Hom. Odyss. x.

70. Circes nomina. Circeium, a promontory of Latium, 'Proxima Circeæ raduntur litora terræ,' Virg. Æneid, vii. 10; see Hom. Odyss. x. init.; it was formerly called Æxæa, or Æxæ. Servius conjectures Circe to have been called Æxæa, from Gr. αἶ, αἷ, hei, ra, interjections expressive of the misery of those whom she changed by her magic into brutes.

— Who knows not Circe,
The daughter of the Sun, whose charmed cup
Whoever tasted, lost his upright shape,
And downward fell into a grovelling swine?

Comus.

This name is sometimes applied also to Ogygia the island of Calypso, in the Ionian or Sicilian sea.

71. Telegoni. Son of Ulysses by Circe, who founded Tusculum, a town in Latium, to the north of Alba, after his return from Ithaca, where he went to seek his father, and killed him undesignedly in a quarrel, whence 'Telegoni juga patricidæ,' Horat. Od. iii. 8, Fast. iii. n. 89, sub. fin. Tiburis. A town of Latium, on the Anio, whence udi; now Tivoli. It was founded by three Grecian brothers, Tiburtus, Coras, and Catillus, and named from the first.

73. Atrides. This must be understood in a similar sense with Agamemnonius, which is applied to Halesus by Virgil, Æneid, vii. 723, and which is understood by Heyne to mean an associate or fellow-soldier of Agamemnon, or probably a descendant; he could not have been, as some suppose, the son of Agamemnon, for his father is mentioned as having been a seer; 'Fata canens silvis genitor celarat Halesum,' Æneid, x. 417, upon whose decease Halesus joined Turnus against Æneas. It does not appear either that Agamemnon had a brother of this name, which precludes the ordinary acceptance of Atrides. Fatis agitatus, is explained by those who make Halesus the son of Agamemnon, to allude to his banishment in consequence of his having conspired with Clytemnestra to effect his father's death; but it may be used, in accordance with the opinion expressed above, in reference to Halesus having shared in the ill fortunes which befel the Grecian chiefs on their return from Troy.

74. Terra Falisca. By a change in the initial letter, the city Falisca, called also Falerii, was named after its founder Halesus.

75. Antenora. See Iliad, v. 348; Antenor always advocated peaceful measures in the Trojan councils, whence suasorem pacis; so Horace, ‘Antenor censet belli præcidere causam.’ Epist. i. 2, 11, and Livy; ‘duobus, Ænea Antenoreque, et vetusti jure hospitii, et quia pacis reddendæque Helenæ semper auctores fuerant, omne jus belli Achivos abstinuisse.’ i. 1. He founded the city Patavium; see Livy, in loc. cit.

76. Œniden. Diomedes, grandson of Æneus, and son-in-law of Daunus, an Illyrian of illustrious family, who was driven from his own country by a rebellion, and settled in Apulia, where he became sovereign of a portion of the country called, after him, Daunia. He bestowed his daughter Eulippa upon Diomedes for his services in a war in which Daunus was engaged with the Messapii; he also gave him a tract of land, in which Diomedes founded the city Argos Hippium, afterwards called Argyripa; ‘Ille urbem Argyripam, patriæ cognomine gentis, Victor Gargani condebat Iapygis arvis,’ Æneid, xi. 246, and lastly Arpi, ibid. 250.

77. Serus ab Iliacis, &c. Æneas did not arrive in Italy until some time after the settlers already mentioned.

79. Hujus. Cujus. Mazar. Voss. Solymus, written also Solemus and Solimus, was the reputed founder of Solymos, called afterwards Sulmo, a small town of the Peligni, in Aprutium, between Aquila and Venafrum, the birth place of Ovid, whence patriæ nostræ, infr. This allusion to his native home, could not fail to awaken the exiled poet’s grief; the repetition of the name, v. 81, is expressive of a deep-seated and enduring affection. The epithet gelidi, refers to the proverbial coldness of the country; ‘et quota Pelignis caream frigoribus, taces.’ Horat. Od. iii. 19, 8.

82. Scythico solo. It is to be supposed that the poet wrote the above during his exile in Pontus.

83. Ergo ego. An aposiopesis. Ergo ego tam longe? Zulich. Mazar. approved by Heinsius.

85. Quò non livor adit? ‘To what lengths does not envy go?

119. Pro Trojá, &c. The poet assigns the cause why she was worshipped with more especial reverence at Rome than she was elsewhere.

120. Læsa manum. See Homer Iliad. v. 335.

121. Cælestesque, &c. In allusion to her having borne away the palm of beauty from Juno and Minerva, in the judgment of Paris upon Mount Ida.

122. Victas hoc meminisse. Dictas hoc meruisse. Mazar. Zulich.

126. Vere nitent terræ. 'Emicuere rosæ, violæque, et molle Cyperon, Albaque de viridi riserunt lilia prato.' &c. Petron.

'Along these blushing borders, bright with dew,
 And in yon mingled wilderness of flowers,
 Fair handed Spring unbosoms every grace.'

Thomson.

'How calm, how beautiful comes on
 The stilly hour when storms are gone!
 When warring winds have died away,
 And clouds, beneath the glancing ray,
 Melt off, and leave the land and sea
 Sleeping in bright tranquillity,—
 Fresh as if day again were born,
 Again upon the lap of morn.'

Lalla Rookh.

134. Quis vittæ, &c. The poet addresses those who wore neither the vitta, the fillet peculiar to the Vestal virgins, nor the stola, the

135. Aurea redimicula. Golden ornaments, necklaces, &c.; redimicula properly signifies the ribbons which fall upon the shoulders from the mitra or turban. Marmoreo collo. 'From the neck of the marble statue,' for the purpose of washing it and re-arranging the rich dress, divitiæ, in which it was usually robed.

138. Nunc alii flores. On the kalends of April, the married women sacrificed to Venus Verticordia; infr. 160. Upon the same day, wearing chaplets of myrtle, they bathed in the Tiber, near the temple of Fortuna Virilis, infr. 145.

139. Sub myrto, sc. Myrto coronata, as sub armis for armati.

140. Causaque. See supr. x. 15.

145. Fortunæ Virili. Τύχη ἀνδρική; Dion. The temple of this deity contained a wooden statue of its founder. Servius Tullius. see Fast. vi. 523.

146. Eo, sc. loco. Calida. Gelida. Al.

147. Posito velamine. The object of propitiating Fortuna Virilis, was, that she might conceal any blemishes upon their persons which were likely to render her fair worshippers less agreeable in the eyes of their husbands.

151. Niveo tritum, &c. This drink was called cocctum, Plin. xix. 8, and was usually presented to a bride upon the day of her nuptials, as an omen of future felicity.

153. Marito. Vulcan.

157. Proavorum tempore. A. U. 639, in the consulship of Acilius Balbus and Porcius Cato, the daughter of a Roman knight was struck with lightning, this was interpreted by the soothsayers as affecting the character of the Vestals, three of whom were convicted, upon investigation, of having broken their vows; the Sibylline books were consulted, and they required that two Greeks and two Gauls should be buried alive; also that a statue should be erected to Venus Verticordia, to prevent the repetition of such a crime. Sulpicia, daughter of Paternulus, and wife of Fulvius Flaccus, was selected, in consequence of the eminent purity of her character and demeanour, to consecrate this statue. Val. Max. viii. 15, Plin. viii. 35.

158. Cumæam anum. The Sibyl already mentioned.

159. Templa. In the Via Salaria, outside the Porta Collina.

160. Verso corde. Hence Venus Verticordia, the Ἀφροδίτη ἀποστροφέα of the Greeks, expressive of the reclaiming of the heart from its vicious wanderings to the sway of a well-regulated affection.

163. Dum loquor. On the morning of the kalends of April, the scorpion sets cosmically.

165. Nox ubi, &c. On the iv. Non. April, the Pleiads set heliacally.

166. Tactæ rore. ‘Sprinkled with the dew.’

169. Humeros paternos. sc. of Atlas: Relevare, see Fast. ii. N. 339.

170. Quæ septem dici, &c. The Pleiads were seven in number, but six stars only appearing in the constellation, the poet proceeds to account for the lost one.

* And is there glory from the heavens departed?—

Oh! void unmarked!—thy sisters of the sky

Still hold their place on high,

Though from its rank thine orb so long hath started,

Thou, that no more art seen of mortal eye!

Hemans.

171. Hinc. Of the Pleiads.

175. Sisyphe. King of Corinth, whom Merope married and bore him Glaucus, Creon, and Laertes.

176. Pudore. The shame of having been espoused to a mortal, while her sisters were thought worthy the attention of the gods.

177. Sive quod, &c. Or Electra, the mother of Dardanus, head of the Trojan kings, might have been the absent star, having concealed herself lest she should behold the overthrow of Troy.

179. Ter sine, &c. Prid. Non.

April. the festival Megalesia, from Gr. μεγάλη, magna, or Ludi Megalenses, was held in honour of Cybele, the mother of the gods, the particulars of which are detailed in the text.

180. Titan. The sun.

181. Berecynthia tibia. The Phrygian flute, so called from Berecynthus, a mountain in Phrygia, sacred to Cybele, or because Midas the king of Phrygia invented it. It was widened towards the end, which was generally made of brass or horn, whence probably inflexo cornu, and lotus adunca, infr. for the purpose of emitting a graver sound ; see Addenda.

182. Idææ. So called from Ida in Phrygia, whence her sacred rites were introduced into Rome, infr. 225. Parentis. Among the appellations of Cybele are Mater Deorum, Ops, Magna Mater, Rhea, and Dindymene, &c.

183. Ibunt seminares. The Galli or priests of Cybele, so called from Gallus, a river in Phrygia, which was supposed to set mad those who drank of it, or from Gallus, the first priest of the goddess, or most likely from the Gallogræci, who had passed into Greece, and from thence into Phrygia. They were called also Curetes and Corybantes, infr. 210, and their chief Archigallus. Inania tympana. The hollow drums.

184. Æra. The cymbals.

187. Scena sonat. Hence the difference between the place and manner of celebrating the Ludi Megalenses and Ludi Magni : the former having been almost exclusively confined to the theatre, the latter to the circus. There is also a material difference as to the period of their institution ; the former having been founded at the period mentioned infra. 225, and the latter by Tarquinius Priscus, Ludique, sc. Megalenses κατ' ἔξοχην.

188. Et fora. Fast. i. 73. Marte suo. So Juvenal, 'ubi summa Quæstio, quæ veniant diversâ parte sagittæ.' Sat. 7, 156. This was a dies nefastus, whence fora vacent, &c.

190. Lotos. The lote or nettle tree, indigenous to Africa, with a black wood, of which the tibiæ were usually made.

191. Doctas neptes. The Muses, who being the daughters of Jupiter, were consequently grand-daughters of Cybele.

205. Veste latens saxum. Εσπαργανοίς εὐληµενον πεπρον, Neap. 'lapidem pannis involutum ;' Forcel.

 At cur turrita caput est ornata corona ?

207. Ardua Ide. A high mountain in Crete, where Jove was concealed by his mother, who employed her priests to drown with their noise his infant cries, hence supr. Gaudeat assiduo cur, &c.

209. Sudibus. Rods or fencing foils ; such as the gladiators used to be presented with, in token of their discharge.

210. Curetes. So called from Gr. κορυζή, tonsure ; they were also called Dactyli, from δακτυλός, digitus, either because they equalled the fingers of both hands in number, or from their having been employed by Cybele for similar purposes of service as the fingers are used. The Corybantes, also priests of the Idæan mother, were so called from Gr. κορύπτω, caput jacto, and βαίνω, incedo, in allusion to their frantic movements, or from κόρυς, oculi pupilla, because they were said to have slept with their eyes open while watching the infant Jove, whence the application of κορυβαντιζῶν, to those 'whose eyes are open, but their senses shut ;' or from κόρυς, the name by which the inhabitants of Cyprus designated brass, in which one of their mountains abounded. They were also called Idæi Dactyli, because according to some mythologists, Cybele flying from Saturn, arrived at the Cretan Ida, and clasped it with her hands while giving birth to Jupiter, whence the Corybantes sprung from that part of the mountain which bore the impression of her fingers. They are said to have been three in number, Damnameneus, Acmon, and Celmo.

212. Raucaque terga. Their drums having been covered with hides.

214. Phrygios modos. The Phrygian measure, which was used in religious ceremonies, was invented by Marsyas, a Phrygian ; the Dorian, which was adapted to warlike themes, by Thamyras, a Thracian, and the Lydian, accommodated to the lighter strains of poetry and love, by Amphion.

221. Hoc quoque. The poet proceeds to account for the introduction of the worship of Cybele into Rome.

223. Dindymon, &c. Mountains in Phrygia.

224. Iliacas opes. All Phrygia was sacred to Cybele.

226. Est pene secuta. 'Almost followed.'

227. Sed nondum. The time had not arrived for the introduction of her rites into Rome.

229. Secula quinque. v. c. 547. 'Civitatem eo tempore (secund. bell. Punic.) repens religio invaserat, invento carmine in libris Sibyllinis, propter crebrius eo anno de cælo lapidatum inspectis. Quandoque hostis alienigena terræ Italiæ bellum intulisset, eum pelli Italia vinci posse, si mater Idæa a Pessinunte Romanam advecta foret.' Liv. xxix. 10.

231. Carminis Euboici. The Sibylline books.

232. Inspectum. sc. carmen. Ferunt. Refert, i. e. sacerdos. Er-furt.

233. Mater. So Cybele was called by the Greeks simply Μητις.

234. Castâ manu. Infr. 279.

236. Quæve parens. According to Livy, in the passage already quoted, s. 229, there was no such ambiguity either as to the person or the place.

237. Consulitur Pæan. Apollo so called from Gr. παῖς, ferio, in allusion to his having slain the Python, or from the same verb in its signification of medeor, curo, from his having been the god of medicine.

239. Mittuntur proceres. 'Legatos ad eum (Attalum) decernunt, M. Valerium Lævinum qui bis consul fuerat ac res in Græcia gesserat, M. Cæcilium Metellum prætorium, Ser. Sulpicium Galbam ædilitium, duos quæstorios, Cn. Tremellium Flaccum et M. Valerium Faltonem.' Liv. xxix. 11.

240. Attalus. King of Pergamus, who assisted the Romans against Philip, Liv. ibid. his name, like that of Cræsus, passed, in consequence of his enormous wealth, into a proverb ; ' Attalicis conditionibus Nunquam dimoveas,' &c. Horat. Od. i. 1, 12 : having had no male issue by his wife Berenice, he bequeathed his possessions, in token of his regard, to the Roman people. Rem negat ille. The poet is at variance here with the historian ; ' Pergamum, ad regem venerunt. Is legatos comiter acceptos Pessinuntem in Phrygiam deduxit ;' it is fit to mention how they found the deity represented ; ' sacrumque iis lapidem, quam matrem Deum esse incolæ dicebant, tradidit, ac deportare Romanam jussit.' Liv. ibid.

246. Nostra eris. The ancestors of Rome having been Phrygians.

248. Illa quibus, &c. ' Classemque sub ipsa Antandro et Phrygiæ molimur montibus Idæ.' Æneid, iii. 5, 6.

251. Sui nati. Neptune.

252. Longaque, &c. The Hellespont

253. Rhæteum. For Rhætea vada, the sea that washes Rhæteum a town and promontory of Troas, as was also Sigæium. The former was celebrated for the tomb of Ajax, the latter for that of Achilles. Rapax, is used here as elsewhere for rapidum. Some copies read capax, in reference to its having been the station of the Grecian fleet.

254. Tenedum. An island on the coast of Troas, in sight of Troy, with a cognominal Æolian town, where there was a temple of Apollo Smintheus. It is said to have been so called from Teunes, or Tenes, who was exposed in a coffin by his father Cygnus, a Thracian, at the instigation of his mother-in-law, and borne to this island, of which he was subsequently appointed sovereign, and deified after death for his extraordinary virtues. Its former name was Leucophrys. It was famous for its earthen ware, Schol. in Aristoph. for the manufacture of which it afforded abundance of excellent red clay, tinedom, whence Bochart would derive its name. For Tenedum, Heinsius proposes to read Theben, of which Eetion was sovereign, and whose shores, between Antandrus and Lyrnessus, might have been visible to those who were conveying Cybele to Italy ; besides the name of Eetion is never found in con-

255. Cyclades. Islands surrounding Delos in the Ægean Sea.

256. Caristeis. So called from Caristus, a city of Eubœa opposite to the island of Andros.

257. Icarium, sc. mare. Between Samos and Myconum, so called from Icarus, the son of Dædalus, who attempted to accomplish an escape from Crete by means of wings, fastened on with wax, 'ceratis pennis,' Horat. The father succeeded ; but Icarus soared too near the sun, and melted the wax, in consequence of which he fell into the sea, which afterwards bore his name.

259. Pelopeïdas undas. Which wash the Peloponnesus.

261. Trinacrium. Sicilian ; so called from the three promontories of Sicily, Pachynus, Pelorus, and Lilybæum. Candens ubi, &c. Ætna, in Sicily, was sacred to Vulcan, the ancients having believed that its eruptions were occasioned by the working of the Cyclops at their forges.

262. Brontes, &c. The three Cyclops, so called from βροντή, tonitru, σπερσπῆ, fulgur, and ακμῶν, incus.

263. Æquoraque Afra. The Libyan Sea. Sardoaque regna. Sardinia, now Sardegna, a large island between the Tyrrhene and Balearic seas ; said to have been colonised by Sardus, a son of Hercules. It lay to the left of those sailing from the Libyan sea towards Italy, whence sinistris prospicit, &c.

266. Dividit. The Tiber emptied itself by two mouths into the Tuscan sea, twelve miles below the city of Rome, whence campo liberiore natat.

269. Procedunt pariter, &c. 'P. Cornelius cum omnibus matronis Ostiam ire jussus obviam Deæ, isque eam de nave accipere, et in terram elatam tradere ferendam matronis.' Liv. xxix. 14.

270. Sanctos. Castos, Petav.

279. Claudia Quinta. ‘Matronæ primores civitatis, inter quas unius Claudiæ Quintæ insigne est nomen, acceperunt: cui dubia (ut traditur) antea fama clariorem ad posterum tam religioso ministerio pudicitiam fecit.’ Liv. ibid. Clausus alto. Atta Clausus, of Sabine origin, was the head of the Patrician family of the Claudii at Rome; whence some propose to read Atta for alto.

282. Acta rea est. ‘Was arraigned.’

283. Cultus, &c. Her dress, and her having appeared in public with her hair fancifully adorned, besides the readiness of her replies to the censures of austere old age, were the sum of the objections against Claudia.

300. Scena. The Megalesia, see N. supr. 187, were called Ludi Scenici, for which scena stands in the text; the poet infers the truth of the extraordinary fact which he has just described, from its having been commemorated by representation on the stage.

303. Tiberina Ostia. Ostia-a, Livy, Ostia—orum, Strabo. A town of note on the left or south side of Rome, at the mouth of the Tiber, whence its name. The first Roman colony was planted there by Ancus Martius, called Colonia Ostiensis. It was celebrated for its salt-works, Salinæ Ostienses, from which the Via Salaria was so called.

311. Almo. See Fast. ii. n. 483.

313. Sacerdos. 'Ἀρχιεὺς ; the Archigallus. He was usually clad in purple, the inferior priests, Galli, in white.

315. Exululant. Their usual ejaculations were, εὐα, σαβοῖ, ὕης ἄττης, ἄττης υἱς.

316. Taurea terga. Drums, covered with the hides of bulls, as supr. 212.

319. Porta Capena. Now Porta di S. Sebastiano, opening out on the Appian way. The Marcian aqueduct passed over this gate, whence Juvenal ; 'Substitit ad veteres arcus madidamque Capenam,' Sat. 3, 11 ; madidam dixit, quia semper inde aliquid stillabat. Forcel.

321. Nasica accepit. '—hospes Numinis Idæi ;' Juvenal, Sat. 3, 137. In consequence of a decree of the senate ; 'quærendum virum optimum in civitate esse, qui eam (Cybelen) ritè hospitio exciperet,' Liv. xxix. 11, P : Scipio Nasica, son of Cneius Scipio and cousin of Scipio Africanus, was appointed on account of the remarkable integrity of his life, 'adulescentem nondum quæstorium, judicaverunt in tota civitate, virum bonorum optimum esse,' Liv. ibid. 14, to receive the goddess, which he did, according to Livy, at the mouth of the Tiber, Substitit hîc Erato ; mora fit, si cætera quæram.

Dic, inquam, parvâ cur stipe quærat opes ?

Contulit æs populus, de quo delubra Metellus 325

Fecit, ait ; dandæ mos stipis inde manet.

Cur vicibus factis ineant convivia, quæro,

Tum magis, indictas concelebrentque dapes ?

Quodd bene mutârit sedem Berecynthia, dixit,

Captant mutatis sedibus omen idem. 330

— Templi tunc exstitit auctor.

‘ Then the founder of a temple came forward.’ Nasica first received and afforded the deity an abode in his own house, then a temple was built for her, according to the poet, by Q. Cæcilius Metellus, who collected a sum of money for this purpose, infr. 325. Livy, however, states it to have been built by M. Livius and C. Claudius, censors. It was restored, after it had suffered considerable damage from fire, by Augustus ; ‘ Templorum positor, templorum sancte repostor,’ Fast. ii. 63, whence Augustus nunc, &c. Some copies for tunc exstitit, read non perstitit, alluding to the change in the name of the founder.

324. Parva stipe. See Fast. i. n. 185, sub. fin. ‘ Ante deum matrem cornu tibicen adunco cum canit, exiquæ quis stipis æra neget.’ Ex. Pont. Ep. 1, 39. During the days of her festival, upon which the statue of the goddess was carried through the city, a man and woman, (both Phrygians, for by a decree of the senate the Romans were forbidden this office,) went from street to street collecting money to defray the expenses &c. of the deity ; so Eustathius ; Μητραγυρτεῖν, τὸ μετὰ τὴν πάντων καὶ τινῶν τοιούτων περιῖεναι, καὶ ἐπὶ τῇ μητρὶ ἀγείρειν τροφάς ; ; whence these collectors were called Μητραγυρται, from μήτηρ and ἀγείρω. Cic. de Legat. ii. c. 9. ‘ Præter Idææ matris famulos, eosque justis diebus, nequis stipem cogito ;’ ibid. c. 16. ‘ Stipem sustulimus, nisi eam quam ad paucos dies propriam Idææ Matris excepimus, implet enim superstitione animos et exhaurit domos.’ The origin of this custom is stated in the text.

327. Cur vicibus, &c. ‘ Why do they feast with each other by turns,’ Forcel. ; more simply expressed by the obsolete verb mutito, probably by syncope for mutuito, th. mutuus. ‘ Principes civitatis, qui ludis Megalensibus antiquo ritu mutitarent, id est, mutua inter se convivia (al. dominia, feasts where one presided who was called dominus) agitent.’ Gell. ii. c. 24. Some, however, from mutarit and mutatis, infr. 355-6, suppose mutito a verb frequentative from muto. The arrangement of the feasts and sacrifices of Cybele as well as the other deities, was at last assigned, in order to remedy the confusion attendant upon them, to the Tresviri Epulones, three men appointed to take charge of all such matters.

328. Tum magis. Mutuita. Heins.

329. Bene mutarit sedem. In coming from Pessinus to Rome.

330. Sedibus. The houses where the feasts were prepared.

NON. APR. FORTUNÆ PUBLICÆ ÆDES DICAT.

Postera cùm cœlo motis Pallantias astris
 Fulserit, et niveos luna levârit equos;
 Qui dicet, Quondam sacrata est colle Quirini
 Hâc Fortuna die Publica; verus erit. 350

331. Institeram. 'I had urgently asked.' Primi. Principal, chief; as appears from their name, place of celebration, &c.

332. Dea. Erato.

334. Principiumque. Cybele, as their general parent, took precedence of all the other deities.

337. Cybelen. A mountain of Phrygia Magna, near Celœnæ, which was formerly its capital, situated at the common springs of the Mæander and Marsyas, on a cognominal mountain; whence altas.

341. Moretum. Gr. μυρωτόν or τρίμυα, a kind of salad, composed of garlic, parsley, cheese, oil, vinegar, onions, coriander, and rue. It is discussed in detail in a poem entitled Moretum, which is to be found among the Catalecta of Virgil.

342. Sua causa. 'A peculiar motive.'

345. Elisæ herbæ. Thence called τρίμυα, from τρίβω, tero.

346. Priscos. Primitive; such as the goddess may have been supposed familiar with in the days of Saturn.

347. Postera. Non. April. Pallantias. Aurora; so called from her having been the cousin of Pallas, the Titan, nephew of her father Hyperion.

348. Levârit. sc. jugo.

350. Fortuna Publica. Gr. τύχη δημοσία. Hac die. Non. April.

OCT. ID. APR. JUBA VICTUS. LIBRA OCCIDIT.
DIES PLUVIUS.

Tertia lux, memini, ludis erat ; at mihi quidam
Spectanti senior, contiguusque loco,
Hæc, ait, illa dies, Libycis quâ Cæsar in oris
Perfida magnanimi contudit arma Jubæ.
Dux mihi Cæsar erat, sub quo meruisse tribunus 355
Glorior ; officio præfuit ille meo.
Hanc ego militiâ, sedem, tu pace parâsti,

351. Tertia lux. The third day of the Megalesia, the day after the nones, viii. Id. April, the plays were represented in commemoration of Cæsar's triumph, as infra.

352. Contiguusque loco. So Homer ; ὅδε δὲ τις ἕπαισεν ἰδὼν ἐς πλεῖστον ἄλλον.

353. Libycis oris. v. c. 707, Cæsar conquered the united forces of Cato, Scipio and Juba, to whom the two former had fled into Africa for assistance after the defeat of Pompey on the plains of Pharsalia. In the course of this engagement, Cæsar made himself master of three camps, and killed fifty thousand of the enemy, with the loss, as it is said, of fifty men only. This was his fourth triumph ; 'Triumphavit post devictum Scipionem quater eodem mense, sed interjectis diebus. Primum et excellentissimum triumphum egit Gallicum, sequentem Alexandrinum, deinde Ponticum, proximum Africanum.' Sueton. It is singular that Plutarch mentions three only, one for Egypt, another for Pontus, and a third for Africa. By perfida arma, allusion may be intended to Juba's having been a Numidian, or his opposition to the arms of Cæsar, which the poet would designate as rebellious. Magnanimi, may be applied in reference to Juba's defeat of Curio, whom Cæsar had sent into Africa, or to his having killed himself, with Petreius, who had shared his good and evil fortune, after he had been overcome at Thapsus, and abandoned by his subjects ; the Romans having considered suicide as an act of heroism.

355. Meruisse. 'To have served.'

356 Præfuit. Because the old man, senior, supr. 352, was a military tribune under the emperor Cæsar.

357. Hanc sedem. In the fourteen rows between the orchestra and the præcinctio prima, (see Adams' Rom. Antiq. Boyd's new edition, pp. 297, 298,) reserved for the equestrian order, tribunes, &c. It appears, however, that it was by virtue of his civil magistracy, bis quinos, &c. and not from his privilege as an Eques, that this seat was assigned to the poet in the text. He was one of the DECENVIRI litibus judicandis, appointed by Augustus, who were to assemble the Centumviri, or judges, and preside at their courts. Ovid probably exercised this office a few years previous to his banishment.

Inter bis quinos usus honore Viros.
 Plura locuturi subito seducimur imbre :
 Pendula cælestes Libra movebat aquas. 369

TERT. ID. APR. ORION OCCIDIT.

Ante tamen, quàm summa dies spectacula sistat,
 Ensifer Orion æquore mersus erit.

PRID. ID. APR. LUDI CEREALES.

Proxima victricem cùm Romam inspexerit Eos,
 Et dederit Phœbo stella fugata locum ;
 Circus erit pompâ celebrer numeroque Deorum ; 365
 Primaque ventosis palma petetur equis.
 Hinc Cereris Ludi : non est opus indice causâ ;
 Sponte Dææ munus promeritumque patent.
 Messis erant primis virides mortalibus herbæ,
 Quas tellus nullo sollicitante dabat. 370
 Et modò carpebant vivaci cespitem gramen ;

359. Subito imbre. The setting of Libra having been attended with rain. Seducimur. The audience usually returned to the porticoes when the entertainment was interrupted by rain ; there having been no roofs to the earlier theatres.

360. Pendula. Poised ; in reference to the literal meaning of libra.

361. Ante tamen. On the III. Id. April, Orion sets heliacally. Ensifer, Ensiger. Al. in allusion to the disposition of the stars in the constellation of Orion, which were assimilated by the ancients to a sword and belt. According to the kalendar of Constantine, the Megalesia terminated on the iv. Id. April.

363. Proxima Eos. Prid. Id. April. the Cerealia commenced.

365. Circus. Sc. Maximus. wherein the games accompanying the festival were celebrated. Before they began, the images of the gods were carried in procession, pompâ celebrer numeroque, &c. on carriages and in frames, 'in theusis et ferculis;' Sueton. Jul. 76, or on men's shoulders, with a considerable retinue of attendants, horse and foot. Then followed the combatants, dancers, musicians, &c. When the procession was concluded, the sacred rites were performed by the consuls and priests.

366. Primaque palma. sc. vic-toria. In imitation of the Greeks, palms were given to the victors at the games ; those also who had received crowns for their warlike achievements, first wore them at the games, A. U. 459, Liv. x. 47.

Nunc epulæ tenerâ fronde cacumen erant.
 Postmodo glans nata est : bene erat jam glande repertâ ;
 Duraque magnificas quercus habebat opes.
 Prima Ceres, homine ad meliora alimenta vocato, 375
 Mutavit glandes utiliore cibo.
 Illa jugo tauros collum præbere coegit ;
 Tum primùm soles eruta vidit humus.
 Æs erat in pretio : chalybeïa massa latebat :
 Heu quàm perpetuò debuit illa tegi ! 380
 Pace Ceres læta est : at vos optate, coloni, Perpetuam pacem, perpetuumque Ducem.
 Farra Deæ, micæque licet salientis honorem
 Detis, et in veteres thurea grana focos.
 Et, si thura aberunt, unctas accendite tædas : 385
 Parva bonæ Cereri, sint modò casta, placent.
 A bove succincti cultros remove te ministri ;
 Bos aret : ignavam sacrificate suem.

The palm-tree is said to have been chosen for this purpose, because from its elasticity it rises against the pressure of a weight placed upon it ; ‘adversus pondus resurgit, et sursum nititur ;’ Gell, iii. 6 ; hence it is used to signify any token of victory, or victory itself. Ventosis equis. Fleet, swift ; θεῖον ἀνέμοισιν ὁμοῖοι, Hom. Il. x. 437. The shows exhibited in the Circus Maximus consisted, according to Tacitus and others, principally of chariot and horse-races.

372. Cacumen. The tops of trees.

375. Prima Ceres, &c. Thus amended by Heinsius, Prima Ceres hominum victu ad meliora vocato. ‘Prima Ceres ferro mortales vertere terram Instituit : cum jam glandes atque arbuta sacra Deficerent sylvæ, et victum Dodona negaret.’ Virg. Georg. i. 148.

379. In pretio. Owing to its scarcity. Chalybeia massa. Steel ; so called from Chalybes, a people of Asia, near Pontus, whose country was said to have been so barren that they derived their support from the metals in which only the country abounded. According to some writers, tempered or sheer steel, only, is properly called Chalybs, from its having been dipped in a river of that name in Spain, in order to harden it, whence also the people adjacent were called Chalybes. Strabo says that this was the ancient name of the Chaldeans ;—Οἱ δὲ νῦν Χαλδαῖοι, Χάλυβες τὸ παλαιὸν ὀνομάζαντο, &c. He identifies them further with the Halizones in Homer, and the Alyba of the poet with Chalyba ; Αὐτὰρ Ἀλιζώνων Ὀδῖος καὶ Ἐπίστροφος ἤρχον Τηλόθεν ἐξ Ἀλυβης, ὅθεν ἀργύρου ἴστι γενέθλη.

387. Cultros remove te. A law is said to have been in force among the primitive inhabitants of Italy, by which a similar punishment was inflicted upon one who had killed a man or an ox.

388. Ignavam suem. A pregnant sow was sacrificed to Ceres, because of the injuries it committed on the corn fields ; 'et prima putatur Hostia sus meruisse mori, quia semina pando Eruerit rostro, spemque interceperit anni.' Metam. xv. 111. Pont. ii. 9, 30.

391. Virginis. Proserpine, daughter of Ceres and Jupiter.

394. Trinacris. Sicily ; so called from its situation and triangular shape.

395. Grata domus Cereri. Ceres had a temple in Sicily, founded by Gelon, a Syracusan, containing two images of the goddess, one of marble and the other brass. Diod. Sic. ii. The fertility of Sicily was proverbial, whence it easily came to be considered as the chosen abode of Ceres.

396. Henna, or Enna. A town said to be in the centre of Sicily, situated on an eminence, to the south of the Chrysas ; famous for a sacred grove, and the site of the temple already mentioned.

397. Arethusa. Nymph of a fountain in Syracuse, whence frigida ; she is said by the poets to have invited Ceres to the banquet, that Pluto might take advantage of her absence to carry away Proserpine. According to Claudian, De Raptu Proserp. i. 134, both Mars and Apollo were her suitors also, for whom respectively Juno and Latona exerted their influence with Ceres, but without effect.

400. Nudo per sua prata pede.

'Nor is the mead unworthy of thy foot,
 Full of fresh verdure, and unnumber'd flowers,
 The negligence of Nature, wide, and wild ;
 Where undisguis'd by mimic art she spreads
 Unbounded beauty to the roving eye.
Thomson.

401. Locus. The cavern whence, according to the poets, Pluto issued to seize his future bride.

403. Tot fuerant illic, &c.

'Infinite numbers, delicacies, smells,
 With hues on hues, expression cannot paint,
 The breath of Nature and her endless bloom,' &c.
Thomson.

408. Et non sentitur. 'Studio fallente laborem.' Horat. Sat. ii. 2, 12.

411. Calthas. Marigolds.

413. Hyacinthe. According to the poets, the boy Hyacinthus, who was undesignedly slain by Apollo, was changed by him into a hyacinth, which was marked with the notes of lamentation, AI, AI, to express Apollo's grief; whence Moschus, in Bion. mort. Νῦν υακινθὲς λαλεῖ τα σα γράμματα, καὶ πλεον AI, AI, λαμβάνει σοις πισταλοῖσι, καλὸς τιδναι μελικτας. The same flower is said also to have sprung from the blood of Ajax when he killed himself, the letters of the leaves expressing half his name, as well as lamentation at his death ; 'rubefactaque sanguine tellus Purpureum viridi genuit de cespite florem,' &c. Metam. xiii. 394. Martyn conjectures the hyacinth of the poets to be the Imperial Martagon, Lilium floribus reflexis, upon the leaves of which he professes to have traced the letters in question. Amarante. Amaranth, or Everlasting, from Gr. a priv. and μαράνναιμι, marcesco.

414. Casiam. See Martyn's Georgics of Virgil, ii. 213. Meliloton, the herb melilot, or Italian clover.

415. Et sunt sine nomine flores. Lecti sinè nomine flores. Heins.

416. Liliaque alba legit. So Claudian ; 'Et aut violas aut candida lilia carpit.'

419. Patruus. Pluto.

420. Cæruleis. Steeds of such a colour were best suited to the king of the shades.

421. Io. 'Dolendi interjectio exclamantis in aliquo affectu ; ut in dolore,' Forcel.

422. Abscideratque. Many copies read Exscideratq. as Virg. Æneid, iv. 'Tum pius Æneas humeris exscindere vestes Auxilioque vocare Deos.'

423. Panditur. Through the cavern already mentioned.

425. Chorus æqualis.—ὁμογενήν ἱερατεινήν. Hom. Il. iii. 175.

432. Threïcias Mænadas. The Thracian Bacchanals, so called from Gr. μαίνουμαι, insanio.

440. Turbâssent signa. By rooting up the ground.

441. Leontinos. Leontium was a town of Sicily on the south side of the river Terias. The territory called Campi Leontini, formerly Campi Læstrigonii, was remarkable for its fertility. The name is derived from Leo, a lion having been the impression on their coins. Now called Lentini, a town situated in the Val di Noto, south-east of Sicily. Amenanaque flumina. The Amenanus, now Indicello, a river in Sicily, rising in mount Ætna, and after a course of ten miles through Catana, falling into the Ionian sea. For cursu Heinsius proposes cursim, the former having occurred so recently supr. 435.

442. Aci. Acis, a river of Sicily, running from a very cold spring at the foot of Mount Ætna ; remarkable for the verdant beauty of its banks, whence herbifer, and also for the swiftness of its current, from which it derives its name, Gr. ἀκὴ sagitta. Now called Aci, Iaci, or Chiæi.

443. Cyanen. A fountain of Syracuse, in Sicily, from which a stream runs into the river Anapus ; also a river of Sicily, and whose name signifies in the Phœnician dialect, a grape, in which fruit the country adjacent to the river abounded.

444. Gela. Gelas, now Fiume di Terra Nuova, an exceedingly rapid river of Sicily, whence ror- ticibus non adeunde, flowing into the sea between Agrigentum and Syracuse. Virg. Æneid, iii. 702.

445. Ortygien. An island adjoining Syracuse, of which it formed one of the four parts under the name of Nasos, Doric for Νήσος; it was joined to Syracuse by a bridge. Megara, formerly called Hybla, was a town towards the eastern coast of Sicily; it was extinct in Strabo's time, but the name Hybla remained, on account of the remarkable excellence of its honey. Pantagias, now Porcari, a small but rapid river of Sicily, running into the Ionian sea to the north of the Sinus Megarensis; so called from Gr. πάντα ἄγιν, because when swollen by the mountain torrents its current became very violent.

446. Simætheas aquas. Sime thus, a river near Catana and the rocks of the Cyclops; it was famous for its mullets.

447. Antra. In mount Ætna; 'Quam subter specus et Cyclopum exesa caminis Antra Ætnæa tonant;' Virg. Æneid, viii. 418.

448. Quique locus, &c. Messina; called also Zancle, from ζάγκλη, falx; the sickle of Saturn, according to the poets, having dropped into Sicily, for which Zancle was also the general name. This fable doubtless arose from the great fertility of the country. By some Drepanum is understood to be the place alluded to in the text, which is so called from Gr. δρέπανος, falx, in reference to the shape of its shore, or according to others, for a similar reason to that already given with regard to Zancle; but as there is an implied allusion to this city subsequently, in the mention of Eryx, at whose base it was situated, the text may be better explained as referring to Messina.

449. Himera. A town, with a cognominal river, between Pelorus and Lilybæum. Didymen. One of the Liparean islands. Acraganta. A town of Sicily, built upon a steep hill, between Pachynus and Lilybæum, called by the Latins Agrigentum; now Fiume di Gergenti. Tauromenonque. A city of Sicily, between Pachynus and Pelorus; so called because it was built on mount Taurus.

450. Sacrorum. Intended for sacrifices. Melan. A river in Sicily.

451. Camerinan. A town near the river Gelas. Thapson. A peninsula of Sicily, to the north of Syracuse; almost level with the sea, whence Virgil; 'Thapsumque jacentem.' Æneid, iii. 689. Heloria tempe. Helorus was a town of Sicily, near Pachynus, with a cognominal river which watered a beautiful plain called Helorius campus, the Heloria tempe in the text. The name

 Hinc Cereris sacris nunc quoque tæda datur.
 Est specus exesi structurâ pumicis asper,

Tempe, Gr. pl. τέμπε, is properly τέμπος, a sacred grove, or choice portion of land, in the Æolic dialect τέμπος; hence it is supposed the Romans formed tempus and its diminutive tempulum or templum. It was formerly applied only to the celebrated vale in Thessaly, but afterwards any place remarkable for its natural beauties might have been so called; besides that mentioned in the text there was a Tempe Teumessia in Bœotia, near mount Teumessos.

452. Eryx. A mountain of Sicily, on the sea coast, between Panormus and Drepanum, the highest, after Ætna, in the whole island, whence patet Zephyro, &c. It was so called after Eryx, the son of Venus and Butes, who was slain by Hercules in a contest with the cestus, and buried on the mountain, where he had built a celebrated temple to Venus.

453. Peloriaden, sc. montem. Pelorus, one of the three promontories of Sicily, near the strait of Messina. Pelorias, sometimes denotes a district distinct from the promontory. It is said by some to have been so called from Pelorus, the pilot of the vessel which carried Hannibal from Italy, who was murdered by the latter through unfounded suspicion of treachery; according to others, it had received the name long before. Lilybæa. A promontory, town, and port on the south-west of Sicily, facing the promontories of Carthage, whence, according to Bochart, it takes name, being opposite to Lybia. Pachynon. Now Capo Passalo, or Passaro, a promontory on the south-east side of Sicily. Virgil shortens the first syllable in Pachynnus; Ovid varies its quantity; Dionysius Periegetes shortens the middle syllable.

469. Pumicis. 'Solent etiam viva saxa cavernulis plena, et pumicem imitantia, hoc nomine appellari. Forcel.

Non homini regio, non adeunda feræ : 470
 Quò simul ac venit, frænatos curribus angues
 Jungit, et æquoreas sicca pererrat aquas.
 Effugit et Syrtes, et te, Zancleæ Charybdi ;
 Et vos, Nisæi, naufraga monstra, canes ;
 Hadriacumque patens latè, bimaremque Corinthon : 475
 Sic venit ad portus, Attica terra, tuos.

471. Angues. Her chariot is represented as drawn by snakes.

473. Syrtes. Two bays on the coast of Africa, destructive by reason of their shoals, violent eddies, and the reciprocations of the tides, by which vessels were stranded on the sand banks, and hence their appellation from σύρειν, trahere. They were divided into greater and less, the former, now gulf of Sidra or Zaloco, lies on the coast of Cyrenaica, to the east; the latter, the gulf of Cabes, on that of Byzacene to the west. In the text, however, Syrtes is applied to Charybdis and Scylla, the former a whirlpool in the straits of Messina and Sicily, whence Zancleæ; so called from Gr. χαίνειν, deliscere, and ῥύσδην, vehementer; now Cariddi; the latter a rock in the Fretum Siculum, near the coast of Italy, equally dangerous to shipping.

474. Nisæi canes. The poets frequently confound, as in the present instance, Scylla the daughter of Nisus king of Megara who cut off her father's purple lock of hair, in order to ingratiate herself with Minos, (of whom she was enamoured, and who was thus enabled to defeat Nisus, with whom he was at war,) and the Scylla intended in the text, who was the daughter of Phorcus and the nymph Chretheis. She was beloved by Glaucus, but rejected his suit, whereupon he had recourse to Circe in order that she might enable him to prevail by the aid of magic. The goddess however, became attached to him herself, and to wean him from his constancy to Scylla, which he affirmed should last while she lived, Circe poisoned the fountain, near Rhegium, where she used to bathe. Upon her descending into the stream, she was transformed to the waist, into various horrible shapes, of barking dogs, &c.; disgusted with herself she plunged into the sea and was changed into a rock, which was said to have resounded still with her dogs and wolves, for which the affrighted sailors mistook the roaring of the waves in its vicinity.

475. Hadriacum, sc. mare, called also supernum, now the Gulf of Venice, washing the southern part of Italy. Bimaremque Corinthon. A rich commercial city of Achaia, in the southern part of the isthmus which joins the Peloponnesus to the continent, anciently called Ephyra; it is washed by two seas, the Ionian and Ægean, whence Gr. διάλαστος, αμφιβάλαστος, Lat. Bimaris.

— Yet she stands,

A fortress formed to Freedom's hands.
 The whirlwind's wrath, the earthquake's shock,
 Have left untouched her hoary rock,
 The keystone of a land, which still Though fallen, looks proudly on that hill,
 The landmark to the double tide
 That purpling rolls on either side,
 As if their waters chafed to meet,
 Yet pause, and crouch beneath her feet.

Byron.

Hic primum sedit gelido mœstissima saxo ;
 Illud Cecropidæ nunc quoque Triste vocant.
 Sub Jove duravit multis immota diebus,
 Et lunæ patiens, et pluvialis aquæ. 480
 Fors sua cuique loco est ; quo nunc Cerealis Eleusin, Dicitur hoc Celeï rura fuisse senis.
 Ille domum glandes excussaque mora rubetis
 Portat, et arsuris arida ligna focis.
 Filia parva duas redigebat rupe capellas ; 485
 Et tener in eunis filius æger erat.
 Mater, ait virgo, (mota est Dea nomine matris,)
 Quid facis in solis incommitata jugis ?
 Restitit et senior, quamvis onus urget ; et orat
 Tecta suæ subeat quantulacunque casæ. 490
 Illa negat ; (simulârat anum, mitrâque capillos Presserat,) instanti talia dicta refert :
 Sospes eas, semperque parens : mihi filia rapta est :
 Heu melior quanto sors tua sorte meâ !
 Dixit : et, ut lachrymæ, (neque enim lachrymare Deorum est.) 495
 Decidit in tepidos lucida gutta sinus.

478. Cecropidæ. Fast. iii. N. 79. Triste. This stone upon which Ceres first seated herself on her arrival in Greece, was called Ἀγέλαστος πίτρα, near a well called Κάλλιχρος. Attica, as appears from what follows, was barren and desolate at the period of Ceres' arrival.

481. Eleusin.—inos. f. A maritime town of Attica, on the western bank of the Cephissus ; from Gr. ἐλευσις, adventus, in reference to the arrival of Ceres, to whom it was considered sacred, and from which her celebrated mysteries, the Eleusinia, received their name. The poet is accused of an anachronism here, since he seems to infer that Ceres was the founder of Eleusis, whereas it is said to have been built by Ogyges, four hundred years before the carrying away of Proserpine, which occurred according to Eusebius in the time of Lynceus, or more probably in the age of Theseus.

482. Celeï. This description of Celeus seems in some degree at variance with the more generally received account, that he was the sovereign of Eleusis.

483. Mora. Blackberries ; Gr. μέρον or μῶρον, from μαυρός, niger. Rubetis. Places where bramble bushes grow, Forcel. Gr. βατών.

491. Mitrâ. Which she wore after the fashion of the Phrygian and Mæonian women.

495. Ut lachrymæ. 'Like tears, a pearly drop descended,' &c. It is to be supposed that as a peculiar kind of fluid issued from a wound inflicted on a deity, — ἄμβροτον αἷμα λείον, Ἰχῶρ, ἵος πέρι τι ρεῖι μακάρεσσι λειοῖσι, Hom. Il. v. 339, so they expressed their grief by other tears than those shed by mortals, neque enim lachrymare, &c.

- Flent pariter, molles animi, virgoque senexque :
 E quibus hæc justi verba fuere senis :
 Sic tibi, quam raptam quereris, sit filia sospes,
 Surge ; nec exiguæ despice tecta casæ. 500
 Cui Dea, Duc, inquit : scisti, quâ cogere posses :
 Seque levat saxo, subsequiturque senem.
 Dux comiti narrat, quàm sit sibi filius æger,
 Nec capiat somnos, invigiletque malis.
 Illa soporiferum, parvos initura penates, 505
 Colligit agresti lene papaver humo.
 Dum legit, oblito fertur gustâsse palato,
 Longamque imprudens exsoluisse famem.
 Quæ quia principio posuit jejunia noctis,
 Tempus habent Mystæ sidera visa cibi. 510
 Limen ut intravit, luctûs videt omnia plena ;
 Jam spes in puero nulla salutis erat.
 Matre salutatâ, (mater Metanira vocatur,) Jungere dignata est os puerile suo.
 Pallor abit, subitasque vident in corpore vires ; 515
 Tantus cælesti venit ab ore vigor.
 Tota domus læta est, hoc est, materque paterque
 Nataque ; tres illi tota fuere domus.
 Mox epulas ponunt, liquefacta coagula lactis,
 Pomaque, et in teneris aurea mella favis. 520
 Abstinet alma Ceres ; somnique papavera causas
 Dat tibi cum tepido lacte bibenda, puer.
 Noctis erat medium, placidique silentia somni ;
 Triptoleum gremio sustulit illa suo :
 Terque manu permulsit eum ; tria carmina dixit ; 525
 Carmina mortali non referenda sono.
 Inque foco pueri corpus vivente favillâ
 Obruit, humanum purget ut ignis onus.
 Excutitur somno stultè pia mater, et amens,
 Quid facis ? exclamat ; membraque ab igne rapit. 530

502. Saxo. Supr. 477.

507. Oblito palato. Because she had resolved to abstain from food until she found her daughter. Servius gives two reasons for the poppy being called ‘cereale papaver,’ either from its having been used like common food, or from Ceres, as supr. having been soothed by its soporific properties into oblivion of her sorrows.

510. Mystæ. The priests of Ceres, so called from Gr. μύω, premo, or μύω, initio. For the Ephori, Epoptæ, &c. see Class. Dic. Eleusinia.

519. Coagula. Rennet whey.

528. Humanum onus. The body of the young Triptolemus.

529. Stultè pia. Foolishly fond.

Cui Dea, Dum non es, dixit, scelerata fuisti !

 Parrhasides stellæ, (namque omnia nôsse potestis,

532. Irrita, &c. The object of Ceres was to endue him with immortality, but her design was frustrated by the groundless fears of Metanira.

533. Primus arabit. The honour of having invented the plough is variously ascribed, by some to Osiris or Buzyges, by others, with the poet, to Triptolemus.

535. Inque dracones. Ascends her chariot, drawn by dragons.

537. Sunion. A promontory, whence expositum, of Attica. Piræa. A celebrated port to the west of Athens, consisting of three natural harbours, or basins, Piræus, Cantharon, and Zea.

538. In dextrum, &c. Attica lay to the right as Ceres set out from Sunium.

544. Meroë. An island of Æthiopia, shaped like a shield, washed by the Nile, Astapus, and Astaboras ; it has a cognominal town, the metropolis of the Æthiopians. According to Josephus it was first called Saba, but changed to Meroë by Cambyses, either after his wife or sister who died there. Sicca terra. Æthiopia.

545. Hesperios. The Spanish and Italian rivers. Rhenum. The Rhine, a river of Germany, rising in the Alps. Rhodanum. The Rhone, a river of Gaul. Padum, anciently called Eridanus, rising in mount Vesulus, in the Alpes Cottiae, and dividing Cisalpine Gaul into Transpadana and Cispadana, now the Po.

549. Liquidique immunia ponti. Those celestial signs which do not appear to set, from their proximity to the pole ; whence Virgil ‘Metuentes æquore tingi.’

551. Parrhasides stellæ. Helice and Cynosura, the greater and lesser bear ; see Fast. ii. s. 156, et seq. and iii. s. 107.

- Æquoreas nunquam cùm subeatis aquas)
 Persephonen natam miseræ monstrate parenti.
 Dixerat. Huic Helice talia verba refert :
 Crimine nox vacua est : solem de virgine raptâ 555
 Consule, qui latè facta diurna videt.
 Sol aditus, Quam quæris, ait. ne vana labores,
 Nupta Jovis fratri tertia regna tenet.
 Questa diu secum, sic est affata Tonantem :
 (Maximaque in vultu signa dolentis erant.) 560
 Si memor es, de quo mihi sit Proserpina nata, Dimidium curæ debet habere tuæ.
 Orbe pererrato, sola est injuria facti
 Cognita ; commissi præmia raptor habet.
 At neque Persephone digna est prædone marito. 565
 Nec gener hoc nobis more parandus erat.
 Quid gravius victore Gyge captiva tulissem.
 Quàm nunc te cæli sceptrâ tenente tuli ?
 Verùm impune ferat ; nos hæc patiamur inultæ ;
 Reddat, et emendet facta priora novis. 570
 Jupiter hanc lenit, factumque excusat amore ;
 Nec gener est nobis ille pudendus, ait.
 Non ego nobilior : posita est mihi regia cælo !
 Possidet alter aquas ; alter inane Chaos.
 Sed si forte tibi non est mutabile pectus, 575

 Hoc quoque tentemus, siquidem jejuna remansit ;
 Sin minùs, inferni conjugis uxor erit.
 Tartara jussus adit sumptis Caducifer alis ;
 Speque redit citiùs, visaque certa refert. 580
 Rapta tribus, dixit, solvit jejunia granis,

555. Crimine nox vacua est. Because she was carried off by day.

557. Soladitus. The sun being accosted.

558. Tertia regna. The sovereignty of the Shades; whence Neptune, Hom. Iliad, xv. 187, Τεῖς γὰρ τ' ἐκ Κόρον εἰμὲν ἀδιλφοί, οὓς τίει Πείη, Ζεὺς καὶ ἐγὼ, τρίτατος δ' Ἀΐδης ἐνέροισιν ἀνάσσει.

559. Tonantem. Jove.

562. Dimidium curæ, &c. Jupiter as the father of Proserpine, is called upon to share the concern of Ceres at her loss.

567. Victore Gyge. Had Gyges succeeded in his designs against heaven, and taken the deities captive, she could scarcely have endured worse.

570. Emendet facta priora novis. Let him atone for his former act, her abduction, by the latter, her restoration.

573. Posita est, &c. Cessit mihi regia cæli. Gottorph.

579. Caducifer. Mercury.

Punica quæ lento cortice poma tegunt.

 Et factura fuit ; pactus nisi Jupiter esset,
 Bis tribus ut cœlo mensibus illa foret.
 Tum demum vultusque Ceres animumque recepit ;
 Imposuitque suæ spicea sarta comæ. 590
 Largaque provenit cessatis messis in arvis ;
 Et vix congestas area cepit opes.
 Alba decent Cererem ; vestes Cerealibus albas

ID. APR. JOVI VICTORI ET LIBERTATI TEMPLA DICATA.

Occupat Apriles Idus cognomine Victor 595
 Jupiter ; hâc illi sunt data templa die.
 Hâc quoque, ni fallor, populo dignissima nostro
 Atria Libertas cœpit habere sua.

582. Punica poma. Pomegranates ; hence at the celebration of Ceres' festival, the Thesmophorizusæ abstained from that fruit.

586. Tænaria valle. In the vale of Tænarus, a promontory of Laconia, now Cape Matapan, terminating the Sinus Laconicus on the west. It contained a cave, sacred to Neptune, through which Hercules is said to have dragged Cerberus from the infernal regions ; ' Tænarias etiam fauces, alta ostia Ditis, Et caligantem nigra formidine lucum,' &c. Virg. Georg. iv. 467. In the text it is used to signify Tartarus itself. Some copies read Tartarea.

588. Bis tribus, &c. The ancients believed that Proserpine remained beneath the earth with her husband during the winter months, from the time of the sowing of the seed ; and in heaven with her mother during the growth and successive stages of the crops.

591. Largaque provenit, &c. In allusion to what the poet had elsewhere expressed of Ceres, in reference to her distraction at the loss of her child ; ' Nescit adhuc ubi sit ; terras tamen increpat omnes, Ingratasque vocat, nec frugum munere dignas,' &c. Cessatis. Whose produce had been interrupted.

594. Pulli velleris. Such as mourning garments were made of ; pullus, from Gr. πῆλος, or πῆλλος, niger.

595. Occupat, &c. On the ides of April was the anniversary of the founding of the temple in honour of Jupiter Victor ; vowed by Q. Fabius Maximus during the war with the Samnites, A. U. 457.

597. Hac quoque, &c. On the same day a temple to Liberty,

DEC. SEPT. KAL. MAI. FORDICIDIA.

Tertia post Veneris cùm lux surrexerit Idus,
 Pontifices, fordâ sacra litate bove.
 Forda ferens bos est fœcundaque, dicta ferendo ; 605
 Hinc etiam fœtus nomen habere putant.

which had been founded by Tiberius Gracchus was rebuilt by Asinius Pollio, by whom it was considerably improved and enlarged, furnished with several noble statues, and a library in which the decrees, &c. of the state were deposited.

599. Luce secuturâ. XVIII. Kal. Maias ; April 14th.

601. Sit licet, ut fuerit. 'Be it as it may ;' Scilicet ut fuerit. Heins. Mutinensia arma. Antony was defeated and deprived of his camp by Augustus, at Mutina, now Modena, a city of Cisalpine Gaul.

602. Grandine. sc. die grandinosa.

603. Tertia lux. XVII. Kal. Mai. April 15th. Veneris Idus. The ides of April, which month was sacred to Venus.

605. Forda. Antiently horda, a pregnant cow, so called a ferendo, as infr. forda ferens bos, &c. or from Gr. accus. φορῶδα, bestiam gravidam. Sacra litate, sc. sacriticate.

606. Fœtus. A more probable origin of this term is fovere.

609. Arce Jovis. In the Capitol. Ter denas, &c. In each Curia one was sacrificed ; Curia is used here for Curiæ.

613. Vitulos. The embryo calves.

— Natu maxima Virgo. The eldest Vestal virgin ; ἡ πρεσβεύουσα, Dio. li.

614. Luce Palis. The day on which the Palilia were celebrated, infr. 695.

615. Rege Numâ, &c. The poet proceeds to detail the origin of the above mentioned sacrifice.

- Nam modò siccus erat gelidis aquilonibus annus ;
 Nunc ager assiduâ luxuriabat aquâ.
 Sæpe Ceres primis dominum fallebat in herbis,
 Et levis obsesso stabat avena solo : 620
 Et pecus ante diem partus edebat acerbos :
 Agnaque nascendo sæpe necabat ovem.
 Silva vetus, nullâque diu violata securi
 Stabat, Mænalis sacra relictâ Deo.
 Ille dabat tacitis animo responsa quieta 625
 Noctibus : hîc geminas rex Numa mactat oves.
 Prima cadit Fauno, leni cadit altera Somno :
 Sternitur in duro vellus utrumque solo.
 Bis caput intonsum fontanâ spargitur undâ ;
 Bis sua fagineâ tempora fronde premit. 630
 Usus abest Veneris : nec fas animalia mensis
 Ponere : nec digitis annulus ullus inest.
 Vestè rudi tectum supra nova vellera corpus
 Ponit, adorato per sua verba Deo.
 Intereâ placidam redimita papavere frontem 635
 Nox venit, et secum somnia nigra trahit.
 Faunus adest ; oviumque premens pede vellera duro,
 Edidit à dextro talia dicta toro :
 Morte boum tibi, rex, Tellus placanda duarum ;
 Det sacris animas una necata duas. 640
 Excutitur terrore quies ; Numa visa revolvit ;
 Et secum ambages cæcaque jussa refert.
 Expedit errantem nemori gratissima conjux ;
 Et dixit : Gravidæ posceris exta bovis.
 Extâ bovis dantur gravidæ : felicior annus 645
 Provenit, et fructum terra pecusque ferunt.

620. Obsesso solo. The ground having been beset, as it were, by the barren wild oat, levis avena, to the exclusion of the fruitful grain.

621. Acerbos. Immature ; a metaphor from unripe fruit.

624. Mænalis Deo. Faunus, or Pan.

626. Hic geminas, &c. Compare Virg. Æneid, vii. 86, et seq.

627. Somno. The god of sleep, son of Erebus and Nox.

634. Per sua verba. In the form prescribed.

636. Somnia Nigra. So Euripides ; Ὠ πόπνια χθών, Μελανοπτερύγων μῦτερ ὀνείρων.

638. Dextro toro. From the right side of the couch, and therefore auspiciously.

640. Det sacris, &c. The difficulty of complying with this injunction startles Numa, and is solved by Ægeria.

643. Errantem Haerentem. Heins. Nemori. The Arician.

645. Bovis gravidæ. Hence the required sacrifice of two lives.

DEC. TERT. KAL. MAI. LUDI CIRCENSES, ET VULPIUM COMBUSTIO.

Tertia post Hyadas cùm lux erit orta remotas,
Carcere partitos Circus habebit equos.

647. Hanc quondam, &c. Venus, to whom the Julian family and its renown was always an object of solicitude, directed this day, xvii. Kal. Mai. to pass more rapidly in order that it might the sooner give place to the following, xvi. Kal. Mai. upon which day Augustus, then in his fifth consulship, was first saluted with the title Imperator, titulum imperii, infr. A. U. 724, on account of his victories; an honour which was conferred upon him, according to Dio, one and twenty times; so Tacitus 'Nomen Imperatoris semel atque viciis partum.' Æthereos equos. The horses of the sun.

650. Prospera bella. Many copies read prospera signa; the reading in the text is decidedly preferable, as the period alluded to was that at which Augustus having returned from his Egyptian conquests, erected an altar to victory, closed the temple of Janus, and received the title as above, from which he began to reckon the years of his reign.

651. Quartus Lucifer. xv. Kal. Mai. the Hyades set.

652. Dorida. The daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, used here to signify the sea.

653. Tertia lux. On the xiii. Kal. M. the games were renewed in the Circus, which Neapolis, however, observes to have continued, without interruption, from the Cerealia.

654. Carcere. So called, 'quod equos coercerat, ne exirent, priusquam magistratus signum mitteret,' Varr. L. L. iv. 32; written also Carcres, and repagula, built first, A. U. 425, and used to express the several openings at one end of the Circus, from which the horses and chariots started in the race-course. In front of the carceres two small statues of Mercury, Hermuli, were placed holding a chain or cord to restrain the horses until the signal was given for the race to begin, instead of which a white line, alba linea, or furrow filled with chalk or lime, thence called creta or calx, was sometimes used, at which the horses were drawn up in a straight row, and held in by persons appointed for the purpose, called Moratores. This line, however, seems to have been most usually drawn to mark the termination of the course, or limit of victory, to which Horace alludes, Ep. i. 16. 79; 'Moriar; mors ultima linea rerum est;' it was called by the Greeks γραμμή, whence Euripides, in Antig. Επ' ἀκρὰν ἥκομεν γραμμὴν κακῶν.

655. Missæ. Into the Circus, during the games. The poet proceeds to describe the origin of the custom alluded to; see Judges xv. 3. seq.

657. Carseoli. A principal town of the Æqui, near the Anio; its supposed site is now called Piano di Carsoli.

658. Ingeniosus ager. A soil naturally fertile.

669. Tibicine. A prop, buttress, or pillar; 'Nos urbem colimus tenui tibicine fultam Magna parte sui.' Juvenal, 3, 193; tibicen, literally a flute-player, is made to bear the interpretation above, according to Festus, because instrumental music supports and sustains the vocal. Villam. So Polyxena, Hec. 366, Σαίρειν τι δῶμα, κερκίσιν τ' ἐφίστάναι.

670. Plumis fovenda. To be hatched.

671. Malvas. Mallows; Gr. μαλάχνη, ab emolliendo ventre;—et gravi malvæ salubres corpori; Horat. Ep. 2, 57. Fungos albos. White mushrooms.

674. Arma. Warm clothing, &c.

676. Addideratque, &c. He was twelve years old.

Is capit extremi vulpem sub valle salicti;

DUODEC. KAL. MAI. SOL IN TAURO.

Postera cûm veniet terras visura patentes
 Memnonis in roseis lutea mater equis;
 E duce lanigeri pecoris, qui prodidit Hellen,
 Sol abit; egresso victima major adest. 690
 Vacca sit an taurus, non est cognoscere promptum:
 Pars prior apparet; posteriora latent.
 Seu tamen est taurus, sive est hoc fœmina signum;
 Junone invitâ munus amoris habet.

677. Extremi sub valle salicti.
 In a valley skirted by an osier bed.

678. Cohortis. A small enclosure containing poultry, a pen or coop; sync. chors; from Greek χόρτος, i.e. περιβολος, a circular enclosure. Varro, L. L. iv. 16, proposes either of two reasons for the ordinary sense of the term cohors, a cohort; 'Ducta est appellatio vel ex eo quod sicut in villa ex pluribus tectis conjungitur, et quiddam fit unum, sic ex manipulis copulatur cohors: vel, ex eo quod quemadmodum villatica cohors, ita et militaris rotunda esse solet; unde et globus militum dicitur.'

687. Postera. XII. Kal. Mai. the sun leaves Aries and enters Taurus.

688. Memnonis. Son of Aurora and Tithonus, slain by Achilles in the Trojan war.

689. Qui prodidit. In allusion to the adventures of Phryxus and Helle already mentioned.

690. Victima. Taurus.

691. Vacca situan taurus. As half the sign only was visible, pars prior, it was not easy to decide whether it was a heifer or a buli; if the former, it was that into which Io was changed, if the latter, it was in commemoration of Jupiter's having assumed that form to deceive Europa; in either case the constellation was set in the heavens as a pledge of affection, munus amoris, against the inclination of Juno.

UNDEC. KAL. MAI. PALILIA.

Nox abiit, oriturque Aurora ; Palilia poscor : 695

Non poscor frustra, si favet alma Pales.

Alma Pales, faveas pastoria sacra canenti,

Prosequor officio si tua festa pio.

Certè ego de vitulo cinerem stipulasque fabales

Sæpe tuli plenâ februa casta manu. 700

Certè ego transilui positas ter in ordine flammas :

Virgaque roratas laurea misit aquas.

Mota Dea est, operique favet : navalibus exi,

Puppis ; habent ventos jam tua vela suos.

I, pete virgineâ, populus, suffimen ab arâ : 705

Vesta dabit ; Vestæ munere purus eris.

Sanguis equi suffimen erit, vitulique favilla ;

Tertia res, duræ culmen inane fabæ.

Pastor, oves saturas ad prima crepuscula lustra ;

Uda priùs spargat virgaque verrat humum. 710

Frondibus, et fixis decorentur ovilia ramis ;

695. Palilia. Written also parilia, (quod eo tempore omnia sata arboresque et herbæ parturiant pariantque, Forcel.) the festival of Pales, the goddess of shepherds, was held on the XI. Kal. Mai. April 21, the anniversary of the founding of the city ; ‘dies natalis urbis Romæ ; Vell. Pat. i. 8. On this day also Cæsar appointed an annual celebration of the Circensian games, because the news of his last victory over Labiennus and the sons of Pompey, at Munda in Spain, had reached Rome the evening before the festival. The poet describes the rites, &c. of the festival in the text.

699. De vitulo. Of the thirty oxen slain on the Fordicidia, which, with the stalks of beans, stip. fabal. culmen inane. infr. 708, formed the usual purificatory offerings, februa casta, or as some copies read, tosta.

701. Transilui. This was called suffitio ; see infr. 753.

703. Navalibus exi. Metaphorically ; the poet frequently speaks so of his task.

705. Virgineâ arâ. The vestal altar. Suffimen. A perfume or scent raised by fire ; any thing burned to produce a perfume.

707. Sanguis equi. According to Plutarch, in Rom. there was not originally any animal sacrifice at the Palilia ; ‘Εν ἀρχῇ δ’ (ὡς φασιν) οὐδὲν ἐμψυχόν ἔθιον ; this custom, however, appears to have been subsequently changed.

708. Culmen inane. The stalk without the pods.

709. Pastor, &c. ‘Shepherd, purify your pastured flocks at the approach of twilight ;’ crepuscula, from creperus, doubtful, because of its uncertain light.

710. Uda virga. The rod or branch with which the water was sprinkled over the sheep, was usually laurel, supr. 702, sometimes of olive, rosemary, or pine. Verrat. Vergat. Petav. Tergat. Al.

Et tegat ornatas longa corona fores.

 Tactaque fumanti sulfure balet ovis.

 Nec noceat turbâsse lacus ; ignoscite, Nymphæ.
 Lota quòd obscuras ungula fecit aquas.
 Tu, Dea, pro nobis fontes fontanaque placa

715. Mares oleas. The male olive. The ancients reckoned numerous varieties of olives ; Cato speaks of eight distinct species, Columella of ten ; see Virg. Georg. ii. 85. Some copies read maris rorem, Gr. λεβανωτῆς, rosemary. Herbisque Sabinas. Savin.

717. Libaque, &c. ‘And let a small basket, fiscella, of millet accompany the millet cakes, libaq. de milio.’

718. Rustica Dea. Pales.

719. Mulctram. The milk pail. Resectis. Paratis. Al. Peractis. Burm.

723. Sive sacropavi, &c. ‘Whether I have fed my flocks on consecrated ground,’ &c. ; the poet proceeds to enumerate the offences he might have undesignedly committed, and ask pardon of the goddess for them.

725. Fugatæ Nymphæ. The ancients believed that any who chanced to come where the nymphs or guardian goddesses of the fountains were bathing, were deprived of their senses, and such were thence called lymphatici, νυμφολήωτοι, frantic, from Greek λύμφη for νύμφη, dea præses aquæ. Semicaperve Deus. Pan or Faunus.

729. Dum degrandinat. Verb impers. ‘While it hails violently,’ Forcel. Gesner explains degrandinat, by donec grandinare desinat, donec cesset grando ; this force of de in composition has been already remarked ; it is often, however, as in the former of the two senses above, merely emphatic, like valde, as Flor. i. 17, ‘Capitisque superioribus jugis, in subiectos jure suo detonuit.’ Heinsius reads dum Dea grandinat, &c.

732. Lota. Mota. Al.

735. Nec Dryadas, &c. For the reason mentioned supr. 751. Labra. Basins for bathing: Gr. ἀσπερσθαι, λουτρά.

739. Neve minús, &c. A prayer against any reduction in the flock at the close of the day from what it was in the morning, either by disease, or the ravages of wolves.

744. Vimina rara. The osier sieves in which the cheese was pressed, and the whey, serum, strained off.

745. Nullas læsura puellas. Consequently of the most delicate description, et, ad teneras, &c. infr.

750. Vivo rore. sc. flumine vivo, Forcel. 'Qui rore puro Castaliæ lavit crines solutos.' Horat. Od. iii. 75.

751. Camellâ. Gr. σακμήλλα,

Pollux. x. 24, a milk-vessel; it is derived by some, qu. camura, from καμπω, in reference to its shape.

752. Sapat. Gr. ἔψημα, σέβασιν, new wine, or must boiled down to half its quantity; e. gr. four pints of must boiled down to two; according to Pliny, however, xiv. 9, s. 11, this was properly called defrutum, and sapa was must hoiled down to a third of its original quantity; the object of this was to make it keep. This mixture of milk and wine was called burrhanica potio, from burrus, G. πυρρός, i. e. rufus, purpureus, ruddy, Lac mistum potes purp. sap. Zulich. Heins.

756. Turba. The number of reasons assigned for the origin of this custom.

757. Vitium. The dross.

Excoquit; ideirco cum duce purgat oves.

An, quia cunctarum contraria semina rerum

Sunt duo, discordes ignis et unda Dei, 760

Junxerunt elementa patres, aptumque putârunt

Ignibus et sparsâ tangere corpus aquâ?

An, quòd in his vitæ causa est; hæc perdidit exul;

His nova fit conjux: hæc duo magna putant?

Vix equidem credo: sunt qui Phaetonta referri

765

Credant, et nimias Deucalionis aquas.

758. Duce. The shepherd, or it may be, the ram.

762. Ignibus, &c. Thereby making the fire and water symbolical of purification: compare Virgil, Æneid, vi. 741, '—aliis sub gurgite vasto Infectum eluitor scelus, aut exurit igni.'

763. Vitæ causa est. Fire and water were looked upon as the essentials of existence, whence the 'aquæ et ignis interdictio,' the forbidding the use of these elements, which was equivalent to a sentence of banishment, exilium, a word not in judicial use, and by which the object of the sentence was obliged to leave Italy, but might retire to any other state he chose.

764. His nova fit conjux. Fire and water were placed at the door, by which the new-married pair entered, and touched by the bride and her husband, because all things were supposed to be produced from these two elements, quod in his vitæ causa, &c. supr.; they used the water also for bathing their feet; Plut. Quæst. Rom. 31, 1, Varr. L. L. iv. 10. 'Ista viri capient, (si jam captanda putabunt) Quos faciunt justos ignis et unda viros.' Art. Amat. ii. 597.

765. Sunt qui, &c. Some would understand allusion to be made by the fire and water to Phaeton and Deucalion. The former was the son of Phœbus and Clymene, one of the Oceanides; having been taunted by Epaphus, the son of Io, with having falsely declared himself the offspring of the sun, he demanded the chariot of that deity, that he might have the guidance of it for one day, and so prove the truth of his descent. Phœbus unwillingly complied, and Phaeton unable to control the steeds was hurried so close to the sign of the Scorpion that in terror he let go the reins altogether; to prevent a universal conflagration by the too near approach of the chariot to the earth, Jupiter struck him with a thunderbolt, and he fell from heaven into the river Po. His sisters mourned his destruction bitterly, and were changed into black poplars, which continued to distil tears of amber, in token of their grief. Deucalion was the son of Prometheus, married to Pyrrha, daughter of Epimetheus; when Jupiter resolved to punish mankind for their impiety by the universal deluge. Deucalion and his wife escaped by taking refuge on the summit of Parnassus, or, according to Hyginus, of Ætna in Sicily. When the waters had subsided, they consulted the oracle of Themis how the race of man might be renewed; the answer was, 'by their throwing behind them the bones of their grandmother,' which they understood to mean the stones of the earth;

they complied accordingly, and those which Deucalion threw behind him became men; those which were thrown by Pyrrha, women.

767. Pars quoque, &c. The poet proceeds to account in different ways for the use of the fire at the Palilia; from the accidental discovery of it by the shepherds, by the collision of flints; from the flames of burning Troy having receded to allow Æneas a safe passage from the city; from the cattle and husbandmen having sprung over the burning ruins of their old habitations, which they fired when about to be transferred to the new city of Rome.

778. Natali tuo. xi. Kal. Mai.

781. Frater. Amulius.

787. Alter. Romulus and Remus having agreed to determine by augury which of them should found the city, and govern it when built, the former chose the Palatine hill, and the latter, the Aventine to make their observations. The result is given in the text.

791. Mœnia signet aratro. When a city was about to be built, the founder yoking a cow and a bull to the plough, as infr. 826, which had a coulter of brass, marked by a deep furrow the entire compass of the city, after which these two animals, with other victims, were sacrificed on the altars. The plough was followed by the new settlers, who turned the sods inwards as they were cut by the share, and wherever they designed to make a gate, the plough was lifted up, and carried over the required space, whence porta, a portando aratrum.

792. Inde. The city having been founded on the same day upon which the Palilia were celebrated.

793. Ad solidum. In the solid ground, in order that the altar might be more firmly based ; so Virgil, Georg. ii. 231, ‘In solido puteum demitti ;’ h. e. ubi terra concava non est, Forcel.

794. De vicino solo. As an omen of the future extension of the confines of the city.

797. Stivam. The plough-tail, or handle, on the end of which was a cross bar, transversa regula, called also manicula or capulus, by which the plough was directed ; it is derived by Varro, qu. stativa, a stando. Those ceremonies observed at the founding of their cities, besides many others connected with the internal constitution of their state, were borrowed by the Romans from the Etrurians.

805. Tonitru lævo. ‘Fulmina læva prospera, quia sacrificantis vel precantis latus lævum, dextrum est ejus qui postulata largitur.’ Plin.

815. Rutro. A mattock, spade, or pick-axe, a ruendo. Varr. L. L. iv. 31. Some copies read rastro. According to Eusebius, Remus was killed by Fabius, a leader under Romulus; the more generally received account is, that he was slain by his brother. Liv. i. 6.

817. Lachrymas devorat. So Silius, xii. 'Fletumque resorbent,' and Ovid, Heroid. Epist. xi. 'Et cogor lachrymas combibere ipse meas.'

820. Sicque meos, &c. Liv. i. 6. 'Sic deinde, quicumque alius transiliet mœnia mea.'

827. Nondum facti. Because they were not called by the name in the text until after the peace with Tattius.

828. Subdita flamma, &c. Remus was buried on the summit of the Aventine mount, where he had taken his augury, in a place called Remuria or Remoria; see Fast. v. 479. It is said that there was a dispute among the earlier citizens as to whether the city should be called Rome or Remora, or, according to others, Remura or Rema. Enn. apud Cic. de divin. i. 48. Dionys. Halic. i. 85.

830. Victorem, &c. So Virgil; 'Omnia sub pedibus vertique regique videbunt.'

835. Vinalia. On the ix. Kal. Mai. was the celebration of the Vinalia, upon which a libation of the new wines was made to Venus, whence this festival is called by Plutarch Ἀφροδίσια, and according to the poet, infr. 860 et seq. to Jupiter also. This festival was held a second time in the year, on the xiii. or xiv. Kal. Septemb. and was called by Varro, rustica; de L. L. v. 3. a med. ' Vinalia rustica dicuntur a. d. XII. Kal. Septemb. quod tum Veneri dicata ædes ; et horti ejus tutelæ assignantur, ac tum sunt feriati olitores,' from whom Festus differs in some degree ; ' Rustica Vinalia appellantur mense Augusto, XIV. Kal. Sept. Jovis dies festus, quia Latini bellum gerentes adversus. Mexentium, omnis vini libationem ei deo dedicaverunt. Eodem die Veneri templa sunt consecrata, alterum ad Circum Maximum, alterum in luco Libitinensi, quia in ipsius deæ tutela sunt horti.'

837. Templa. A temple was dedicated to Venus Ericina at Rome, A. U. 572. near the Porta Collina ; in the same year a temple was dedicated to Piety in the Forum Olitorium.

838. Siculo colle. Eryx ; ' Est prope Collinam templum venerabile portam ; Imposuit templo nomina celsus Eryx.' Ovid. Remed. Amor.

840. Claudius. M. Claudius Marcellus was the first of the Roman generals who obtained any advantage over Hannibal ; in his third consulship he was sent with a considerable force against Syracuse, of which he made himself master, having entered the town while the inhabitants were engaged in their nocturnal celebration of the festival of Diana ; whence Syracusas Arethusidas, &c. ; so named from its celebrated fountain Arethusa ; he was called upon, after the conquest of Syracuse, to oppose Hannibal a second time, and after some successful engagements, was at last entrapped in the wiles of his adversary, and killed in an ambuscade in the sixtieth year of his age, and his fifth consulship. He was the third who obtained the Spolia opima, having, after the first Punic war, gained a victory over the Gauls, and slain their king Viridomarus, A. U. 530.

841. Carmine vivacis, &c. The poet has committed an error here, the temple to which he alludes, near the Porta Collina, having been dedicated by Porcius L. F. Licinius, in pursuance of a vow made to that effect by L. Porcius during the Ligurian war, A. U. 572, whereas Syracuse was taken A. U. 540 ; and further, the temple built in honour of Venus on the Capitoline hill, by the command of the Sibyl, was built A. U. 537 ; so that in neither case can the poet be considered correct. Translata. From Sicily to Rome.

845. Turnus, &c. This war is discussed at large in the six latter books of the Æneid.

854. De lacubus, &c. See Fast. iii. nn. 558, 559.

855. Operæ. sc. auxilio.

859. Hostica. Of the Rutuli, in opposition to Latio palmite, infr.

861. Vota meliora. Because they were addressed to Jupiter.

863. Calcatis sordidus uvis. In allusion to the custom of treading out the grapes, a practice still frequent in many parts of Italy ; '—nudataque musto Tinge novo mecum direptis crura cothurnis.' Virg. Georg. ii. 7.

'Then comes the crushing swain ; the country floats,
 And foams unbounded with the mashy flood.'
Thomson.

867. Sex ubi, &c. When six days of the month of April shall remain, &c. i.e. the vii. Kal. Mai. shall be the middle of the spring, which is assigned, however, by Columella to the day on which the festival of Pales was celebrated, xi. Kal. Mai.

869. Pecudem. The ram, aries, upon which Phryxus and Helle, son and daughter of Athamas, are said to have escaped the fury of their step-mother Ino, Fast. iii. 830, et seq. sets acronycally on the vii. Kal. Mai.

870. Signaque dant imbres. Fast. i. 315, 316. Exoriturque canis. The poet is incorrect here ;

ROBIGALIA.

- Hac mihi Nomento Romam cùm luce redirem,
 Obstitit in mediâ candida pompa viâ.
 Flamen in antiquæ lucum Robiginis ibat,
 Exta canis flammis, exta daturus ovis.
 Protinus accessi, ritûs ne nescius essem : 875

 Aspera Robigo, parcas Cerealibus herbis ;
 Et tremat in summâ læve cacumen humo.

 Nec venti tantùm Cereri nocuère, nec imbres,
 Nec sic marmoreo pallet adusta gelu,
 Quantum si culmos Titan incalfacit udos ; 885

Pliny says that according to the Bœotians and Athenians, the Dog sets on the twenty-sixth of April, but according to the Assyrians, on the twenty-ninth ; ‘Sexto calendas Maii Bœotiae et Atticæ canis vesperi occultatur fidicula ; ‘mane oritur ; quinto calendas Assyriæ Orion totus absconditur, tertio autem canis ;’ Columella mentions also that it sets about this time, and dates its rising, ii. 2, on the vii. Kal. Aug. In order to remedy this inaccuracy, some copies read for Exoritur, &c. Occidit atque canis, or Effugietque canis.

871. Hac. sc. die. Nomento. A town of the Sabines not far from the Tiber, and to the east of Rome.

872. Candida pompa. A procession of priests clad in white robes.

873. Flamen. sc. Quirinalis. Robiginis. The festival Robigalia was instituted at Rome in honour of the goddess Robigo, or according to Varro and Festus, of the god Robigus, for the preservation of the corn from mildew, robigo ; it was ordained by Numa, whence antiquæ, &c. in the eleventh year of his reign, and celebrated at this particular period of the year because the growing crops were more exposed to the injurious effects of smut, mildew, &c. Many copies read Rubiginis, which seems to accord better with its etymology rubor or rubeus. According to Panvinus, the deity Robigo had a temple and sacred grove in the Via Nomentana, outside the Porta Catulæ.

874. Extâ canis. See infr. 905.

878. Læve. Smooth, opposed to scabras, infr. 887.

884. Marmoreo. ‘Dicitur etiam de gelu, quod duritiem marmoris et candorem refert ; hard as marble ;’ Forcel.

of the crop, was when the sun bore with violence upon the ears soaked with moisture. Titan. The sun.

887. Scabras. Scurfy, scalled.

889. Contere. Gnaw, wear away.

899. Mantele. And Mantelium, a towel, napkin, or table-cloth, from manus terere, qu. manutrium, Varr. de L. L. v. 8, extr. or from manus and tela. Mantele differs from mappa, the former having been used as a table cloth, furnished by the host at an entertainment, and the latter a towel for wiping the hands, which the guests generally brought with them; hence Martial, xii. 29, 'Attulerat mappam nemo dum furta timentur; Mantele e mensa surripit Herniogenes;' besides the mantele was napped or fringed, villosum, or villis solutis, while the mappa was smooth; the former also was used in sacrifices, for wiping the hands after their celebration.

900. Paterâ. A cup used in libations. Acerra. A censer for burning incense.

905. Est Canis, &c. When Icarus, or Icarus, father of Erigone was slain by some intoxicated shepherds, his dog, called Mera or Mœra, which accompanied him, returned home, and taking hold of Erigone's robe, drew her to the place where the dead body of her father lay; she died with grief at the sight, and the dog remained by both until it perished with hunger. Jove in compassion raised them to the skies, where Icarus was called Bootes, Erigone, Virgo, and the dog Procyon, i. e. πρό and κύων, Lat. Antecanis, the lesser dog-star, so called from its rising before the greater. Quo sidere moto. At the rising of which star.

Tosta sitit tellus, præcipiturque seges.

QUART. KAL. MAI. FLORALIA.

Cum Phrygis Assaraci Titania fratre relicto
 Sustulit immenso ter jubar orbe suum; 910
 Mille venit variis florum Dea nexa coronis:
 Scena joci morem liberioris habet.
 Exit et in Maias sacrum Florale Kalendas:
 Tunc repetam; nunc me grandius urget opus.

VESTÆ PALATINÆ ET PHŒBI FESTA.

Aufert Vesta diem; cognato Vesta recepta est 915
 Limine: sic justi constituere Patres.

906. Præcipitur, sc. æstu. Is dried up. Virg. Ecl. 3, 98, '— si lac præceperit æstus.' Some copies read præciditur, others, præripitur.

909. Titania. Aurora, so called as the daughter of Hyperion, the Titan; many copies read Tithonia, but the reading in the text is sanctioned by the best copies. Fratre relicto. The poet appears to have put Assaracus, the son of Troas, and grand-uncle of Priam and Tithonus, for Priam himself, since fratre must apply to Tithonus, whose brother Priam was.

910. Sustulit, &c. The festival Floralia began on the iv. Kal. Mai. See Fast. v. 183, et seq.

911. Mille venit, &c. Flora was the presiding deity over every species of plant and flower.

912. Scena. The theatre in which the Ludi scenici accompanying the festival were represented. Those games were of an excessively licentious character, whence joci morem liberioris.

913. Exit et, &c. This festival which commenced near the close of April, was carried on and concluded in May; Fast. v. 185.

915. Aufert. Aufer, Ursin, Mazar, and others; in which, for recepta est, is read recepta es. Cognato. See Fast. iii. 421. The text is not to be understood as referring to the Vestalia, the festival of Vesta, which was celebrated on the vi. Id. Jun. the day alluded to above, was the anniversary of the transferring of the Vestal fire into the palace of Augustus on the Palatine hill, when he was elected Pontifex Maximus, pursuant to the rule, that the priests of that deity should live in the immediate vicinity of the object of his office.

916. Sic justi. Whence it would appear that the senate had decreed the above.

Phœbus habet partem ; Vestæ pars altera cessit :

Quod superest illis, tertius ipse tenet.

State Palatinæ laurus, prætextaque quercu

Stet domus ; æternos tres habet una Deos.

920

917. Phœbus habet partem. A temple was dedicated by Augustus to Apollo on the Palatine hill ; whence Ovid, Metam. xv. 864, 865, ‘Vestæque Cæsareas inter sacrata Penates, Et cum Cæsarea tu, Phœbe domestice, Vesta.’ It contained a public library, in which authors, poets especially, used to recite their compositions, Pers. l. 15, and in which all works of merit were preserved. ‘Scripta, Palatinus quæcunque recepit Apollo.’ Horat. Ep. i. 3, 17.

918. Ipsæ. Augustus.

919. Palatinæ laurus, &c. In allusion to the civic crown of oak-leaves, which the senate decreed should be suspended from the top of the house of Augustus and Claudius, between two branches of laurel, which were set up in the vestibule in front of the gate, symbolical of their preservation of the citizens, and triumph over their enemies.

920. Tres Deos. Augustus, Apollo, and Vesta. Una. sc. domus. The Palatium.

1. Quæritis, &c. The poet proceeds to discuss the origin of the name of May, upon which he consults the Muses, by some of whom it is differently accounted for.

2. Liquido. Clearly.

— Cognita. Ascertained.

3. Ut stat, &c. 'Ὡς δ' ὅταν αἰζῇ νόος ἀνέρος, οὐτ' ἐπὶ πολλὰν Γαῖαν ἰληλυθώς, φρεσὶ πευκαλίμῃσι νοήσῃ, Ἐνθ' εἶπεν, ἥ ἔνθα, μνησιν ἄσπετος ἔσται πολλὰ. Hom. Iliad, xv. 80.

7. Aganippidos Hippocrenes. Aganippe, or Aganippis, was a fountain at the foot of Mount Helicon, sacred to Apollo and the Muses ; Hippocrene, also a fountain of Helicon on the borders of Bœotia ; the poet appears to consider them both the same in the text. Solinus and others more correctly distinguish them, and ascribes their being identified, as above, to poetic license. They were easily confounded, by reason of their vicinity, and their having been both consecrated to the same presiding deities. It has been proposed to read the passage thus, Dicite, quæ fontes Aganippidos, Hippocrenes, &c. taking the adj. Aganippis, for Aganippe, as patronymic adjectives are frequently used poetically for substantives, Forcel.

8. Medusæi equi. See Fast. iii. 448, et seq.

9. Dissensere. Disagreed in opinion. Dissidere, Farnes. as Metam. xv. 648, 'Dissidet et variat sententia.' Assensere. Junian. Polyhymnia. The muse of Lyric poetry ; so called from πολύς, and ὕμνος carmen, or according to some, μνήα, memoria, qu. Polymneia.

Post Chaos, ut primùm data sunt tria corpora mundo,

11. Tria corpora. See Fast. i. 103, et seq.

13. Pondere terra suo, &c. Compare Metam. i. 26, et seq.

19. Sæpe aliquis. Compare Juvenal. 13, 38.

20. De mediâ plebe. Gr. τὸν τυχόντα.

21. Latus junxit. So Horace, Sat. ii. 5, 18, 'Utne tegam Spurco Damæ latus.' This verse is suspected by some commentators, and various readings proposed ; Nec latus Oceano quis quando leve tegebat ; Mazar. Nec latus Oceano, quamvis grandæva tegebat, Tethys, &c. Al. By the Deus advena, it is to be understood that there was at this time no distinction of rank or character among the deities.

22. Extremo loco. On the lowest or least honorable couch. See Adam's R. Antiq. Boyd's new edit. pp. 371, 372.

24. Corpora, &c. A periphrasis indicative of marriage, which is frequently shown by this figure, Ovid. ex Pont. iii. ep. 3, 50, 'legitimos sollicitare toros.' Fast. iii. 511, 'Tu mihi juncta toro.'

25. Majestas. The offspring of Honour and Reverence, whence, according to Polyhymnia, the name Maia or May. Est censa. i. e. numeravit, habuit, Forcel. ; the deponent form of censeo ; so ex Pont. i. ep. 2, 139, 'Hanc probat, et primo dilectam semper ab ævo Est inter comites Marcia censa suas.'

28. Sinu. Robe or vestment.

29. Pudor et Metus. The associates of majesty by which she was preserved inviolable. Consedere. So Hesiod, Εργ. Ημ. 197. Ἐλευνάτων μετὰ φῶλον ἴτον προλιπόντ' ἀνέρωπους Αἰδῶς καὶ νημεσις.

'Called to the eternal synod of the skies, The virgins Modesty and Justice rise.'

60. In statione. At their post.

61. Illæ, sc. ætas senilis. The poet proceeds to describe the constitution as it was ordained by Romulus.

63. Nec nisi, &c. In the choice of senators regard was not only paid to their rank and fortune, but to their age also ; it is certain that some particular period of life was defined, previous to which they could not be elected, Cic. de leg. Manil. 21, but what that period, the ætus senatoria, was, is not known. In Cicero's time, it is probable, that members were admissible at one or two and thirty years of age, since he makes frequent mention of his having obtained all the honours of the state, each in his proper year, suo anno, as ordained by law, and it is known that he had passed his thirtieth year before he obtained the quæstorship, which he filled the year following in Sicily, and which was the first civil office that gave admission into the senate. Some are of opinion that the quæstorship might have been held at twenty-five, Dion. Cass. lii. 20, and, therefore, that senators might have been chosen at such an age ; others, on the authority of Polybius, vi. 17, (who mentions that the Romans were obliged to serve ten years in the army, for which seventeen was the prescribed age, ætus militaris, before they could be appointed to any civil magistracy,) conjecture twenty-seven to have been the requisite time of life for a senator. It is certain, however, that originally the senate consisted of men advanced in life ; Sall. Catil. 6, Cic. de Sen. Flor. i. 15, and supr. post annos seros, &c. It may be concluded from the laws prescribed to foreign nations, in imitation of the Romans, that in after times the required age for a senator was not below thirty ; Cic. in Varr. 2, 49 ; Plin. Ep. x. 83.

67. Medius. The most honorable place, among many ; as it was also to walk inside if there were only two. See Sall. Jug. 11, Horat. Sat. ii. 5, 17.

69. Verba quis, &c. Τελευταῖοι δὲ οἱ νεώτατοι, λόγον μὲν οὐδένα λέγοντες, ἔτι γὰρ ἦν δι' αἰσχύνης τό τε Ῥωμαῖοις τοῦτο, καὶ νῦν οὐδεὶς αὐτὸν σοφώτερον εἶναι ἤξειυ πρεσβύτου. Dionys. Halicarn. vii.

71. Selectaque pectora. So Propertius ; ‘ Pellitos habuit rustica corda patres ;’ and Virgil ; ‘ — juvenes fortissima frustra Pectora.’ Some copies read corpora.

74. Tangor, &c. i. e. inducor ut credam. Forcel. Consuluisse. Consulted the divinity of their years.

76. Sustinuisse. Withstood.

77. Nec leve. June, as derived from juvenes, is advanced as another argument in favour of May having been derived from majores.

The order of the text in construction is, Et Junius successor, dictus a nomine juvenum, habet non leve pignus præpositi (qui Maio præcedenti datur) honoris.

80. Sui chori. This alludes to as many of her sister Muses as were inclined to adopt the opinion of their leader Calliope ; three only having given an opinion on the subject, it is to be supposed that the rest were variously influenced by the different conjectures.

81. Titanida. Tethys was so called from her having been the sister of Titan, or Titanus, son of Cœlus or Uranus, and Vesta or Terra ; Fast. ii. 159.

83. Hinc sata, &c. Fast. ii. s. 372.

KAL. MAI. ORITUR CAPELLA.

Ab Jove surgat opus : primâ mihi nocte videnda
 Stella est in cunis officiosa Jovis.
 Nascitur Oleniæ signum pluviale Capellæ ;
 Illa data cælum præmia lactis habet.
 Nais Amalthea Cretæâ nobilis Idâ 115
 Dicitur in silvis oculuisse Jovem.
 Huic fuit hædorum mater formosa duorum
 Inter Dictæos conspicienda greges ;
 Cornibus aeriis, atque in sua terga recurvis ;

ing to Calliope, the origin of the name May.

104. Inventor, &c. Mercury was the inventor of the lyre, and the patron god of thieves ; fidis, is used by prose writers in the plural only, indifferently by the poets ; it had seven strings, whence infr. septena putaris, &c.

108. Habet idem. sc. juris, or auctoritatis ; the poet acknowledges himself to be at a loss what opinion to adopt as each of the Muses was entitled to the same authority and regard.

111. Primâ mihi, &c. On the kalends of May the goat rises heliacally.

112. In cunis officiosa. Kindly attentive to the infant years of Jove ; cunæ, literally, a cradle, is derived qu. cynæ, from Gr. κυων, pario.

113. Oleniæ. The goat, Capella, was so called from Amalthea having resided at Olenus, a town of Achaia in Peloponnesus, situated on the river Melas, between Patra and Cyllene. According to others, Olenus was a city of Boeotia in which Amalthea had been reared, whence Aratus ; Ὀλινθίην δὲ μιν ἄλλα Διὸς καλίουσ' ὑποφῆται. Pausanias mentions Neda and Ithome as having been the nurses of the infant Jove while in the Dictæan cave : to these some writers add Adrastea, Apollon. Rhod. Argon. iii. and Ida, daughters of Melisseus, and sisters of the Curetes. Lactantius, De fals. reliq. mentions that Jupiter was nursed by Amalthea and Melissa, daughters of Melisseus, king of Crete, upon goat's milk and honey. Amalthea is sometimes confounded with the goat by which Jove was suckled, and to which the nymph gave her own name, whence probably the mistake arose. The goat and its two kids were changed into stars by Jupiter ; the goat, αἰζ, appears in the shoulder, and the kids in the left hand of Auriga, or Ἡμιόχος ; their rising and

127. Sidera nutricem, &c. He changed the goat and her horn into stars ; quod dominæ, &c. it was called κόρας Ἀμυλλείας, or cornu copiæ, the horn of plenty. Compare Ovid. Metam. ix. 85, et seq.

129. Præstitibus. Infr. 134. On the Kalends of May every year the public sacrifices were offered to the Lares. It appears that Augustus directed them to be performed twice in the year publicly, that the Lares might have the primitiæ, of the spring and summer flowers, Sueton. in vit. August. 31. and privately as often as the families over which they presided should happen to require their assistance.

131. Curius. Manius Curius Dentatus, a noble Roman who held the consulship with P. Cornelius Rufinus ; he triumphed first over the Samnites, to whose ambassadors, (who found him engaged in dressing some rape root,) when they sought to corrupt him with gold, he made the celebrated reply ; Curium malle imperare locupletibus, quam locupletem fieri : et qui in acie vinci non posset, eum pecunia corrumpi non posse. He conquered the Sabines also, and obtained an ovation for his defeat of the Lucani. He drove Pyrrhus out of Italy, Eutrop. ii. 9—14. Horace represents him as wearing his hair undressed, in allusion, probably to the manners of the age in which he lived, when the refinements of after times were held in contempt ; ‘ — in comitis Curium capillis Utilem bello.’ Od. i. 12, 41. He was considered as a pattern of frugality and courage, whence Juvenal ; ‘ Qui Curios simulant et Bacchanalia vivunt.’

132. Saxo. The stone of which the images of the Lares were made.

141. Turba Diania. Dogs, which were sacred to Diana, as the goddess of the chase.

143. Gemellorum Deorum. Fast. ii. 497. Quærebam. I was at a loss, I was enquiring after.

145. Mille Lares. A thousand statues of the Lares, a definite put for an indefinite number, which succeeded the twin statues that had fallen to decay. Upon the passage of Horace, Sat. ii. 3, 281, 'Libertinus erat qui circum compita siccus Lautis mane senex manibus currebat ;' Acro remarks, Augustum jussisse in compitis deos penates (Lares, id est deos domesticos. Porphy.) constitui, ut studiosius colerentur. In every street there were the two statues of the Lares, with an image of Augustus, whence Geniumq. ducis, and vici trina numina colunt. By some commentators these latter phrases are supposed to allude to Mercury, the father of the Lares, Fast. ii. 495, but besides the compliment which the poet may in this instance be admitted to have paid Augustus with sincerity, the text is in favour of the interpretation as above ; tradere, est, offerre alicui tuendum, ornandum, Forcel. 'Compitales Lares ornare bis in anno instituit, vernis floribus et æstivis.' Sueton. Aug. 31, whence tradidit, 145, may be correctly explained by ornandos instituit.

147. Augustus mensis. The month of August ; so Juvenal, Sat. 3, 9, 'Augusto recitantes mense poetas.' Martial, Epig. xii. 68. 'Augustus redit idibus Diana.'

148. Diva Bona. Gr. Ἀγathe θεά ; the earth was worshipped under this appellation by the Romans, because it supplied mankind with all the requisites for existence, whence Bona Dea is considered synonymous with Fauna, a favendo, Fatua, a fando, quod infantes partu editi non prius vocem edunt quam terram attigerint ; Forcel. and Ops, ab ope ferenda. By some she is identified with Maia, by others with Juno, or Semele ; according to Varro, Bona Dea was the daughter of Faunus, and so strictly chaste, that she never left her apartment, γυναικωνίτης, never saw a man, nor was seen by one ; consequently men were forbidden to enter her temple, or be present at her sacrifices, which were performed in secret and by women only. The sanctity of her rites was profaned by P. Clodius, who was enamoured of Cæsar's second wife, Pompeia, one of the priestesses of the goddess, and obtained admission to the deity's sanctuary disguised as a woman. He was discovered, however, and driven out by Aurelia, Cæsar's mother ; Sucton. in Cæs. 6, and 74. Cicero dwells strongly upon this criminality of Clodius, in his oration in defence of Milo. Sacrifices were offered to this deity on the kalends of May, in the house of the consuls and prætors, to propitiate her good will towards the Roman people ; a pregnant sow was the usual victim.

149. Moles nativa. A natural rock ; Heroid. ep. 5, 61, ' Adspicit immensum moles nativa profundum ; Mons fuit.' the poet proceeds to describe the temple of Bona Dea on the Aventine hill.

152. Palatinæ aves. The twelve vultures which Romulus saw and accepted as a favorable augury, were so called from his having chosen the Palatine hill for his place of observation.

153. Oculos exosa viriles. Supr. n. 148.

155. Veteris Clausorum, &c. See Fast. iv. 279 ; there is no reason for doubting that the same person is intended by both passages. The temple was built by Claudia, and restored by Livia, who desired not to be surpassed by her husband in zeal and respect for her country's deities.

159. Postera. vi. Non. Mai.

161. Argestes. Called also Iapix ; the north-west wind ; fabled to be the son of Aurora. Mulcebit. Seneca, v. Quæst. natur. c. 16, draws the following distinction between the winds of Corus, and Argestes, which are frequently identified, the former being considered the Latin name for the latter ; ' Cori violenta vis est, et in unum partem rapax ; Argestes fere mollis est, et tam euntibus communis, quam redeuntibus.' Miscebit. Sarrav. concutendo enim miscet aristas. Burman. mulcebit, i. e. leviter agitabit, motabit. Forcel. So Cicer. in Arat. 88, ' Igniferum mulcens tremebundis æthera pennis,' winnowing the air. Fast. i. 155.

cities, was remarkable for the accommodation and security of its extensive harbour; the ordinary passage from Italy to Greece was from this port to Dyrrachium; whence Horace in his ode to the vessel in which Virgil embarked for Athens; 'Sic te diva potens Cypri, sic fratres Helenæ lucida sidera, Ventorumque regat pater, astrictis aliis præter Iapyga:' Od. i. 1, l. et seq.

163. At simul inducunt, &c. According to the poet, the Hyades rise acronycally; in this he varies from the more correct authorities who assert their heliacal rising to be on the VI. Non. Mai.; so Pliny, xviii. 66, 'VI. Non. Maii. Cæsari Suculæ matutino oriuntur.'

164. Pars Hyadum. The poet proceeds to discuss in the following lines the origin of the Hyades; they appear to have been so called by the Greeks from Gr. ὑεiv, pluere, in consequence of the storms that accompany their rising and setting. They are also called Suculæ, a name which originated in the ignorance of the ancient Romans, who supposed that the constellation was so called from its resemblance to the figure of a small sow, sucula, dimin. from sus, as bucula from bos, in the Greek ὕδης; this error was exposed and refuted by Cicero, l. ii. de Nat. Deor. c. 43, 'Tauri caput stellis conspersum est frequentibus. Has Græci stellas ὕδης vocitare suerunt; a pluendo, ὑεiv enim est pluere.

Nostri imperite Suculas, quasi a suis essent, non ab imbribus nominatæ.' A sagacious German critic wishes to infer an allusion to the name suculæ, from toto de grege, supr. the application of grex however is not to be so limited; Cic. pro. Sull. 28. 'Honestissimorum hominum greges;' De Orat. i. 10. 'Philosophorum greges;' Id. Attic. ep. i. 18. 'Amicorum greges;' Horat. Ep. i. 9, in fin, 'Scribe tui gregis hunc;' i. e. recipe inter tuos amicos, Forcel. Senec. in Irond. 138. 'Grex regum;' Sil. vii. 58, 'Grex ille virorum;' from which it would appear that grex might be applied to the assemblage of stars which form a constellation, independent of any forced conceit. Another origin of the term Hyades is said to be the resemblance in the disposition of the stars to the Greek letter  $\tau$ :

165. Ora micant Tauri, &c. The seven stars which constitute the Hyades being placed in the head of Taurus; Schol. German. Tauro. 'In signo autem Tauri frons et facies Hyades appellantur.'

167. Pars Bacchum nutrisse. According to some authorities, these seven stars were originally nymphs of Dodona in Epirus, nurses of the infant Bacchus, who, dreading the resentment of Juno and the cruelty of Lycurgus, were translated by Jupiter to the skies. Schol. Hom. ad Iliad. xviii. 486,  $\Phiρεκύνδης δὲ τὰς Ῥάδας$

168. Tethyos neptes. Some suppose the Hyades to have been the granddaughters of Tethys and Oceanus, whose daughter, Stirps Oceani, &c. infr. Æthra, was married to Atlas.

169. Nondum stabat. In allusion to his having been changed into a mountain; see Fast. ii. N. 372.

172. Nymphas. The Hyades.

178. Libycæ feræ. According to some, Hyas died in consequence of a sting from an adder.

182. Illæ sc. pietas.

183. Mater florum. Flora; Fast. iv. 911. Ludis jocosis. The games in honour of this deity were checked at last from their extreme depravity.

186. Alter te fugiens, &c. The one, April, engages you at its close, fugiens, the other, May, at its approach, cum venit. The Floralia began April 28th, and ended May 3d; they were instituted about the age of Romulus, but Flora had been worshipped by the Sabines long before the building of Rome, and likewise among the Phœceans previous to the same period. Tatius was the first who built a temple to her at Rome. According to Lactantius, i. c. 20, Flora was a celebrated courtesan who left the Roman people heir to her unbounded wealth, on condition that her birth-day should continue to be celebrated by a festival to be called Floralia, or Ludi Florales; the senate, however, became ashamed of the character to which they were thus bound to acknowledge their obligations, and taking the hint from her name, they appointed a deity by the same title, who was to be worshipped as the goddess of gardens and flowers. This festival was not much attended to until v. c. 580.

187. Confinia mensum. The end of one month and the beginning of the other; so that either of the two, ille vel ille, is equally suitable for the poet's purpose, the praise of the goddess, Convenit in laudes, &c.

189. Circus. That in which the festival of Flora was celebrated was in the sixth quarter of the city; it is used in the text for the festival itself; in hunc exit, ends in this month, May. Clamataque. sc. celebrata; so Statius, Theb. vi. 557, 'Et bis in Isthmiaca victor clamatus arena Phædimus.'

190. Munere. This term is applied to shows, spectacles, and public sights or entertainments, exhibited by the magistrates at Rome, chiefly by the Ædiles; they were sometimes exhibited by private persons, who, during the days of their celebration, were invested with the insignia of magistracy; such were called munerarii or muneratores, editores; 'Munera nunc edunt—' Juvenal. and domini. These shows, &c. were called munera, 'quia tanquam dona dabantur populo in remunerationem accepti ab eo honoris.' Forcel.

194. Vernas efflat ab ore rosas.

'Flushed by the Spirit of the genial year,
Her lips blush deeper sweets, she breathes of youth.'

Thomson.

195. Chloris. Gr. Χλωρίς from χλωρός, viridis, th. χλὴν herba; whence Flora, by changing the Greek Χ, CH, into Φ, PH, or F, a form observable in other Latin words of Greek origin, Fundo, Futis, &c.; it has been noticed in other languages also by Wachter; 'The English quiver sprang from the German kocher, ch. being changed into f, or (which has the same power) into v.' Again; 'Liften, to lift, from Belg. lichten, ch. is often changed into f.'—Valpy's Lat. Etym. Dic. in voc.

197. Nymphæ campifelicis. Flora was a field nymph before she became the goddess of gardens; her occupations were not much changed by her appointment to the latter province, the gardens of the Romans in the Augustan age having owed but little to art or cultivation. In the time of the younger Pliny more care and attention was bestowed upon them, and the garden beds were dressed and bordered with cut box; it was about this period also that the fountain of Egeria underwent the change of which Juvenal complains, Sat. 3, 20. Spence supposes the garden of Flora to have been the paradise of the Roman mythology; the Romans probably derived their notions of it from the Greeks, who appear to have embodied their conceptions of it in the garden of Alcinoüs. It would appear to have been shadowed out in the Hesperides of the Africans, whose site is accurately described by Pliny, xix. 4, 'In Mauritania Lixi oppidi æstuario: ubi Hesperidum horti fuisse produuntur: 200 passuum ab oceano; juxta delubrum Herculis, antiquius Gaditano ut ferunt.' In the east they had the gardens of Adonis, to which also Pliny alludes; 'Antiquitas nihil prius mirata est, quam Hesperidum hortos, ac regum Adonis et Alcinoi.' ibid. The term Horti Adonides was used by the ancients to signify gardens of pleasure, which agrees exactly with the import of paradise, or the garden of Eden; as Horti Adonis does with the garden of the Lord. Polymctis. 251, x.

219. Charites. The Graces were three in number, Aglaia, Thalia, and Euphrosyne; they were the daughters of Jupiter and Eurynome, or of Bacchus and Venus. They were represented naked, and twined in each other's arms; whence Horace, 'Segnesque nodum solvere Gratiae;' and Seneca, (who discusses their characters and provinces at length, de Benif. i. 3) 'Ille consertis manibus in se redeuntium chorus.' Eteocles was the first, (in the opinion of his countrymen, who assigned them their number, three) who sacrificed to the Graces; the Lacedæmonians reckoned only two, Clita and Phœna. In the remote periods of antiquity they were represented as clothed. Pausanias could not discover by whom they were first exhibited naked. *Dymock's Biblioth. Thomson.

223. Therapnæo sanguine. In allusion to Hyacinthus; see Fast. iv. 413; who was born at Amyclæ, a town founded by his father Amyclas, in the vicinity of Therapnæ in Laconia. According to Apollodorus, he was the son of Venus and Adonis. In remembrance of his untimely death, the Spartans celebrated a yearly festival, Hyacinthia annua sacra, in spring, or as some say, in summer. Ovid. Metam. x. 19.

225. Narcisse. Son of the river Cephisus and the nymph Lyriopæ; while quenching his thirst at a fountain he became enamoured of his own reflection in the water, and gradually pined away under the influence of his unavailing passion, until he was changed into a flower which bore his name. Pliny derives it from νάρκη, torpor, because its scent induces sleep; xxi. 5; and v. 9.

226. Alter et alter. One of two, and different or distinct from the other; the poet means to say that Narcissus was unfortunate in his shadow not having a separate existence and independent of his own. Alter. qu. ἄλλος ἕτερος. Fest. or alius eorum. Ihre.

227. Crocon. A youth enamoured of the nymph Smilax; he was changed into a flower of Met.* iv. 283. Attin. A young Phrygian with whom Cybele fell passionately in love ; she prevailed on him to swear that he would continue always chaste, but having violated his vow with the nymph Sagartitis, the goddess struck him with madness, and he inflicted a wound upon himself, from which the blood that fell was changed into a violet. He was changed into a pine tree. Cinyræque creatum. Adonis, son of Cinyras king of Cyprus, by his daughter Myrrha. Some say that he was the son of Thoas, king of Assyria and Myrrha ; Hesiod makes him the son of Phoenix and Alphesibœa. He was singularly beautiful, and beloved by Venus, who changed him after he had been killed by a wild boar, into an anemone.

 Et pereunt lentes, advena Nile, tuæ.

251. Quod petis, &c. 'The aid which you require a flower shall afford, sent to me from the Olenian field ;' so called from Olenus in Achaia.

257. Thracen. So called from Thrax a son of Mars, or from τραχύς, asper, from the character of its inhabitants, who are thus described by Pomponius Mela, ii. c. 2,—'feros homines, aspero cultu et indecenti: ceterum feroces, immitesque et ad bella proclives. Quare poetæ inter eos habitare Martem, et ab iis præcipue coli dicunt ;' it is now called Romania. Propontidos. Now the sea of Marmora ; it was so called from its being the entrance, πρό, ante, to the Pontus Euxinus ; it formed part of the eastern boundary of Thrace, whence læva Propont, &c.

261. Forsitan in teneris, &c. Flora asserts that her influence is not confined to the produce of the garden, or coronary flowers ; she claims a wider field for her dominion and agency.

265. Si bene floruerint oleæ, &c. Compare Virg. Georg. i. 187. Nitidissimus. Nitidi dicuntur unguentis delibuti ; unguenta enim nitent. Hinc nitidus annus apud, Ovid. qui oleo abundat ; Forcel. in voc.

268. Lentes. Lens.-tis. f. Lentils, a species of pulse, 'Nec Pelusiæ curam aspernabere lentis,' Virg. Georg. i. 228 ; that which grew in Pelusium, a town of Egypt, which gave name to one of the seven mouths of the Nile, was considered of the best description. Advena. The Nile was so called because its source was in Æthiopa, which Philostratus said was possessed of its springs, as Egypt was of its mouths. The Nile runs in a straight course from Æthiopia, northward to the place named Delta ; or according to Herodotus, to Cercasorum, a town situated at the point or vortex of the Delta ; as Plato calls it ; where the river divides itself into two channels ; the right, or east, which leads to Pelusium, and the left, or west, which leads to Canopus. With regard to the number of its channels and its mouths, authors are not agreed ; Aristotle making all the mouths, except the Canopic, artificial, while Herodotus ascribes five out of the seven to nature.

269. Vina florent. In allusion to the scum on the surface of new wine ; Cato. R. R. xiv. 21. ‘ Flos vini caudidus probatur ;’ h. e. spuma tenuis vino innatans ; Forcel. in which sense nebulæ is also to be understood.

271. Volucres. The bees.

272. Cytisos. From various passages in the Eclogues of Virgil, it would appear that this plant was grateful to both bees and goats. It is generally allowed to be the Cytisus Maranthæ, the wood of which is described by Theophrastus as hard and thick, bearing the closest resemblance to ebony ; whence the Turks use it when the plant has grown old, for the handles of their sabres, and the monks of Patmos for their beads. Thyma. The thyme of the ancients is essentially distinct from the plant which is known by that name in this country ; the former abounded upon the mountains of Greece, which were celebrated for the exquisite fragrance and flavour of their honey.

273. Idem facimus. sc. floremus.

279. Cætera, &c. Flora proceeds to account for the origin of the games which were celebrated in her honour. Instrumenta. Appliances ; money, &c.

280. Aut pecus, &c. Property consisted either of cattle or land ; whence locuples, from locus taken in the sense of ager and plenus ; qu. plenus agrorum, or cui pleni sunt agri ; and pecunia, which is derived from pecu, the first coin at Rome having been stamped with the figure of cattle ; or because it was given in exchange for cattle as the chief commodity, or because it was first made of the hide of cattle ; whence Seneca ; ‘ Qui aureos debet, et qui corium forma publica percussum, quale apud Lacedæmonios fuit, quod usum numeratæ pecuniæ præstat.’

282. Sed jam de vetito, &c. See Addenda.

public pastures or land ; every thing from which the public revenues were raised ; so Pliny, xviii. 3, ‘ Etiam nunc in Tabulis Censoris pascua dicuntur omnia, ex quibus populus reditus habet, quia diu hoc solum vectigal fuerat.’ Depascere. To consume by feeding upon, to depasture ; a trespass upon the public property countenanced by superior interest and favour, which by long sufferance had become an established custom, to the prejudice of the state.

285. Publica. Many copies read pabula, but the former is preferable, both because of privato in the line following, and loca publica, or publica simply, being in frequent use among the writers upon the property and revenues of the Romans.

286. In privato. The privilege of the public pastures having been withdrawn, it only remained for the feeble and spiritless, inertis erat, &c. to confine their cattle to their own private and inadequate estate.

287. Ædiles Publicios. Two brothers, L. M. Publicii Malleoli, Ædiles of the people ; infr. 291 and 294.

288. Ante. They had not the courage in the first instance to take up the subject with the promptness it deserved.

291. Mulcta data est, &c. With which a temple was built, and games instituted ; so Tacitus, Annal. ii. ‘ Iisdem temporibus (A. U. 769) Deum ædes vetustate aut igni abolitas, cœptasque ab Augusto dedicavit ; Libero, Liberæque et Cereri, juxta Circum Maximum, quas A. Postumius Dictator voverat ; eodemque in loco ædem Floræ, ab Lucio et Marco Publiciis Ædilibus constitutam,’ (A. U. 513) and in whose consulship appears from Paterculus ; ‘ Torquato Sempronioque Consulibus, Brundisium coloniis occupatum, et post triennium Spoletium : quo anno Floralium ludorum factum est initium.’

292. Victores. sc. Ædiles.

293. Clivum. sc. Capitolinum. It was let on condition that it should be levelled for a carriage-road.

294. Publiciumque. Varro, de L. L. iv. ‘ Clivus Publicius, ab Ædilibus plebei Publiciis, qui eum publice ædificarunt. Simili de causa Publicius vicus et Cosconius vicus, quod ab his viris dicuntur ædificati.’

295. Negavit. For sixty-six years previous to the time at which the goddess is supposed to have spoken, her festival had not been celebrated ; the poet describes how this neglect was visited upon her careless worshippers.

305. Thestiaden. Meleager, grandson of Thestius, by his mother's side, son of Æneus and Althæa : at his birth, the Parca informed his mother that he would live until the piece of wood then burning on the fire was consumed ; upon which she removed the faggot, and preserved it with the utmost care. Meleager having killed the wild boar at the hunt of Calydon, Hom. Iliad, ix. gave its skin to Atalanta, who had first wounded it, and of which his maternal uncles having attempted to deprive her, were slain by Meleager. Althæa having been informed of her brother's death, threw into the fire the piece of wood upon which her son's life depended, and he expired immediately on its being destroyed ; whence flammis absentibus, &c.

She afterwards killed herself through grief ; Ovid. Metam. viii. 446 et seq.

306. Quod Phœbes ara, &c. See Homer, Iliad, ix.

307. Tantaliden. Agamemnon, the great grandson of Tantalus. Vela tenebat. See Fast. i. n. 387.

308. Virgo est et spretos, &c. With all the gentleness of a maiden, she still had the spirit to avenge the insults offered to her dignity.

309. Hippolyte. Proverbial for his contempt of Venus and her worshippers ; Eurip. Hipp. 102, Πρόσωθεν αὐτὴν ἄγνός ὦν ἀσπάζομαι ; and, 113 ; Τὴν σὴν δὲ Κύπριν πολλὰ ἰγὼ χαίρειν λέγω ; see Fast. iii. n. 263.

313. Fierem manifesta doloris. ' By what means could I shew symptoms of my displeasure ; ' the genitive is highly emphatic in its dependance on manifesta ; so Sallust, in Jug. 39, ' Manifestus sceleris ; ' and in Catil. 56, extr. ' Manifesti rerum capitalium.'

314. Notæ. Disgrace ; Senec. in Herc. Fur. 634, 'Hanc ferat virtus notam.'

315. Excidit officium, &c. Indignant at her ill-treatment, Flora ceased to exercise her cherishing care over that portion of nature, assigned as her dower by Zephyrus, and which was indebted to her constant protection for its bloom and beauty ; the results are detailed in the text.

327. Convenere Patres. The annual celebration of the Floralia commenced v. c. 580, in the consulship of L. Posthumius Albinus and M. Popilius Lænas.

335. Sutilibus coronis. 'Ex rosarum foliis consutis factæ,' Forcel. ; called by Hesychius, ῥάμματα ἀνθινά, from ῥάπτω, consuo. For tota Heinsius proposes pota, i. e. potu madida.

337. Philyra. The inner bark of the linden.

338. Arte meri. Such skill as drunkenness could teach.

343. Acheloë. Upon the banks of this Ætolian river, the vine is said to have been planted first.

 Floreat ut toto carmen Nasonis in ævo ;
 Sparge, precor, donis pectora nostra tuis.

345. Coronam, See Fast. iii. n. 457 and n. 509.

348. Cothurnatas Deas. i. e. graviores, severioresque, Forcel. majestic or tragic deities ; so called because cothurnus was the buskin or shoe worn by tragedians. Servius ascribes its introduction on the stage to Sophocles, others to Æschylus.

351. Cur tamen, &c. As white robes were worn at the Cerealia, in imitation of the colour of the ripening corn : so at the festival of Flora, the garments of her worshippers were variously dyed, to resemble the flowers over which that deity presided.

356. In mensas. The tables of the ancients were decorated at their banquets with a profusion of flowers, principally roses.

357. Lumina. The poet proceeds to inquire why torches were used at the Floralia.

367. Claudantur rete. In order that they might be let loose and chased in the Circus.

375. Nocte minus quarta. On the third night from the Kalends, v. Non. Mai. the constellation Chiron rises. He was one of the most distinguished among the Centaurs, whence Semivir, et flavi, &c. son of Saturn and Philyra, and celebrated for his skill in herbs and in medicine. His daughter Endeis was the mother of Peleus, and grandmother of Achilles, whom, as also Æsculapius, Chiron is said to have nursed.

nine days suffering Chiron died, teen stars ; Hyginus reckons

twenty-four, but including a vic-

503. Operis fastigia summi. The fastigium of the Latins, the τείχεος, or τείχων of the Greeks, was a species of roof peculiar to the temples of the gods, of a triangular form, on the vertex of which stood the statue of the deity. The house of the Cæsars was allowed this token of pre-eminence after the Romans had begun to pay them divine honours; whence Cicero, Phil. ii. c. 43, de Jul. Cæs. 'Quem is majorem honorem consecutus erat, quam ut haberet pulvinar, simulacrum, fastigium, flamine?' 509. Iliaden. Romulus bearing the spolia opima, having slain Acron, king of the Ceninenses.

510. Subesse. On the base of the statues the name and exploits of those whom they represented were inscribed.

511. Prætextum. Adorned ; Fast. iv. 919.

512. Lecto Cæsare. From the perusal of Cæsar's name.

513. Cum pia sustulit arma. To avenge his father's death ; Fast. iii. 676, et seq.

514. A tantis. With so great omens of future greatness. Princeps. When Augustus became the head of the government, he avoided those titles which were associated in the minds of the Romans with all that was tyrannical, and assumed that of Princeps, to which no such idea could be attached, from their having been long familiarized to the titles of Princeps senatus, and Princeps juventutis.

515. Milite justo. The army with which Augustus was to punish the murderers of Cæsar.

516. Conjuratis. Brutus and Cassius, with their partizans.

518. Nomen utrumque. That of Father, and Pontifex Maximus. Some copies read numen utrumque as referring to the deified Julius and Vesta.

524. Persequitur Partha, &c. There was not any event in the life of Augustus more distinguished, or upon which he prided himself more, than his having recovered, without bloodshed, by the mere terror of his name, the military standards, spoils, captives, &c. which the Parthians had taken from the Romans under M. Licin. Crassus. Hence it became a favorite theme with the poets ; Horat. Od. iv. 4, et seq. 'Tua Cæsar ætas Fruges et agris retulit uberes, et signa nostro restituit Jovi, Derepta Parthorum superbis postibus'—; see also Fast. vi. 419. Virg. Æneid, vii. 606.

526. Circumfusus fluminibus. The Tigris, Euphrates, &c.

527. Crassorum funera. M. Licinius Crassus, and his son P. L. Crassus, both fell in the Parthian war.

533. Notas veteres. Thirty two years having elapsed before this stain upon the Roman name was removed by the arms of Augustus.

539. Bis ulto. Whence the title Bisultor, owing to the double success of Augustus, at Philippi and against the Parthians. Some copies read nomenque Bisultor.

541. Sollenni Ludos Circo, &c. On the iv. Id. So Horace, Od. iii. 27, 74, 'Mitte singultus; bene ferre magnam Disce fortunam: tua sectus orbis Nomina ducet.'

563. Phariam juvencam. Io, or Isis, so called from Pharos, an island at the Canopic mouth of the Nile. Fast. iv. 691.

565. Virgo. The Vestalis Maxima, who was attended upon this occasion by her sister Vestals priests, prætors, &c. Priscorum virorum, Prid. Id Mai. the effigies of thirty old men, stuffed with straw or rushes, simulacra scirpea, were thrown from the Sublician bridge, roboreo ponte, by the Vestal virgins, into the Tiber. For the origin of this practice, the poet assigns three opinions, vs. 567, et seq. infr.

566. Roboreo ponte. The Pons Sublicius, or Æmilius; a wooden bridge erected by Ancus Martius over the Tiber, Liv. i. 33, in order to form a communication between Janiculum and the city; it was so called from publicæ, stakes, of which it was at first formed, but it was subsequently rebuilt with stone by Æmilius Lepidus. It was called by Plutarch, ξυλίνη γέφυρα, and generally by the Greeks, ίερά, in allusion to the veneration with which it was regarded by the Romans for its antiquity, or because it was traversed by the sacred processions, when crossing the Tiber to celebrate any of their usual solemnities at the far side of that river.

Fama vetus : tum cum Saturnia terra vocata est,

567. Corpora post decies, &c. The poet gives the first opinion as to the probable origin of this custom; and asserts that those who believe old men of sixty to have been thus got rid of, bring a charge of guilt against their ancestors as having countenanced such a crime. See N. 569, infr.

569. Tum cum Saturnia, &c. Some commentators appear very anxious to remove this stigma, 571, infr. from the ancient Latins. One, in particular, with a peculiarly unhappy affectation of singularity, has, in a late work, 'hinted his opinion that human sacrifices were totally unknown in the heroic ages of Greece, and that all legends relating to such are comparatively late fictions!' Upon this it is merely necessary to observe, that Homer speaks of twelve Trojan captives having been sacrificed at the funeral of Patroclus, to which may be added the immolation of Polyxena at the tomb of Achilles, and the offering of Iphigenia at the altar of Diana, which are sufficient to prove, if nothing else, that the Greeks were at least familiar with the accounts of such sacrifices. But in later ages the practice was anything but unusual. Aristomenes the Messenian, sacrificed three hundred men, among whom was Theopompus, one of the kings of Sparta, to Jupiter of Ithome. Themistocles, in order to procure the assistance of the gods against the Persians, as Plutarch relates, sacrificed some captives of that nation. Bacchus had an altar in Arcadia, at which young women were beaten to death with bundles of rods, and the Lacedæmonians seem to have had a similar custom, of scourging their children, frequently to death, in honour of Diana Orthia. The Christian Apologists, Clemens of Alexandria, Lactantius, Minutius Felix, Cyril of Alexandria, Eusebius and others, discuss this subject of human sacrifices sufficiently to set the question at rest, and shew the futility of any opinion as opposed to fact. But the commentator proceeds still further, and extends 'his theory' to Italy, asserting 'that there are no testimonies on which to rely, of such a practice, viz. human sacrifices, having prevailed in it at the time when the poet says it was called Saturnia terra.' Why the ancient Latins, who observed with such complacency the worship of a Deity whom they believed to have devoured his own children, should have been in any degree more refined than the barbarous aborigines of any other nation, does not so clearly appear ; at all events they seem to have fallen away sadly from their first estate, when the Roman Homer ventured to depict the hero of the Æneid in such colours as the following ;—Sulmone creatos Quatuor hic juvenes, totidem, quos educat Ufens, Videntes rapit, inferias quos immolet umbris, Captivoque rogi perfundat sanguine flammæ. Æneid, x. 517, see also xi. 81, 82. The subject may be dismissed with Heyne's note upon the passage as above, 'Nondum igitur ea ætate metuendum fuit Maroni, ne displiceret immane facinus lectoribus : nec Æneas, ubi ira ad furorem actus summa cum crudelitate supplicem ac pretium offerentem Magum obruncat et Tarquiti cadaveri insultat, ad Romanorum sensus videri debuit inhumaniter et impie egisse ; etsi hoc ad nostrum sensum aliter se habet.'

572. Tuscis aquis. The Tiber.

573. Tirynthius. Hercules. Arva. sc. Latina.

574. Leucadio modo. Leucadia, or Leucas, formerly called Neritis, now Santa Maura, was originally a peninsula of Acarnania, but the isthmus having been cut through, it became an island. Some derive its name from Leucas, a companion of Ulysses, or a boy beloved by Apollo ; others with more probability, from the white rocks which form the celebrated Lover's leap. The custom alluded to in the text was that of throwing a criminal, upon the celebration of the sacred rites of Apollo, from the brow of the mountain into the sea, having first attached to his body a species of wings, and a great number of birds to break his fall. At the bottom, small boats were so disposed as to receive him with the least possible injury, and transfer him to another country. It was usual for those who had lost their parents, or entertained an ineffectual passion, to precipitate themselves from this rock ; whence the name, Lover's Leap. Ovid. Heroid. ep. xv. 165, 'Hinc se Deucalion, Pyrrhæ succensus amore, Misit, et illæso corpore pressit aquas.' From this promontory Sappho, too, is said to have thrown herself. Cf. Byron.

as also from vs. 589 and 595, the name of those figures, Argei may have originated.

606. Cursum sustinuistis. In token of reverence for the deity.

607. Clare nepos Atlantis. The poet invokes Mercury, whose festival was celebrated on the Ides of May, on which day a temple had been dedicated to him near the Circus Maximus ; infr. 613.

608. Pleïas una. Maia. Arcadiis montibus. Cyllene.

617. Est aqua Mercurii. Outside the Porta Capena, on the Appian way, there was a well, sacred to Mercury, with the waters of which the merchants and venders used to sprinkle themselves for purification ; infr. 623.

618. Numen. A divine virtue.

619. Incinctus. i. e. quoad tunicas. The tunic was fastened by a girdle, or belt, about the waist, to keep it tight, which served also as a purse in which they kept their money, whence incinct. tunic. merc. the merchant in his tunic girt.

622. Omnia, quæ dominos, &c. Every thing which was going to be sold, and so become the property of new owners.

625. Ablue præteriti, &c. Compare Persius. Sat. 2, 5, et seq.

628. Non audituri. Whom the perjurer did not wish to hearken to his abjuration.

631. Pereant veniente die. Let there be no trace remaining of the perjuries on the succeeding day; or, as some copies read pateant, let an opportunity of such frauds be afforded me on the day to come.

634. Et face, ut emtori, &c. And make it profitable to me to have imposed upon the purchaser.

636. Ortygias boves. Ortygia was the ancient name of Delos; from Gr. ὄρνις, a quail, into which Latona was changed, and so disguised fled thither for refuge from the persecution of Juno. The circumstance alluded to in the text was Mercury's having stolen the oxen of Admetus, king of Phœræ, in Thessaly, which were tended by Apollo; whence Or-

Hic quoque mensis habet dubias in nomine causas :
Quæ placeant, positis omnibus, ipse leges.
Facta canam ; sed erunt, qui me finxisse loquantur,
Nullaque mortali numina visa putent.
Est deus in nobis ; agitante calescimus illo.

1. Hic quoque mensis, &c.—June, like some of the preceding months, presents a difficulty with regard to the origin of its title, which Juno, Hebe, and Concord separately promise to solve.

5. Est Deus in nobis. To obviate the objection that might arise to the poet's having been favoured so far as to have held a personal conference with a deity, he advances an irresistible and impressive argument which is strikingly suitable to his purpose, the consciousness of the god within. The sense of the text could not be more ably or beautifully developed than in the following lines.

—————“ What is that thing,
That nameless thing, about us, or within,
That will not brook the bondage of our lot,
But revels wildly like the mountain-wind?
—That bounds at will o'er Nature's battlement,
Where awful shade her adamantine doors

Cast on the confines of the universe ?
—That glides, too, through the closest seal of thought,
More subtle than thin air?—that ranges back
Amongst the mysteries pre-adamite,
Then in a moment starts, and shoots
away Unmeasured years before us, to the doom,
Where the great book is opened, and the judge
Of men is seen upon his cloudy throne!
—That plunges into earth an hundred leagues
Beneath the knotted roots of ancient hills,
And then emerges in its vast rebound,
As high as unto heav'n?—ay, what is that,
That glows and freezes in the conscious heart,
Thinks in the head, and lives within the soul?
—Not mortal, surely—not akin to clay—
Not weak, degraded, foul—but great, divine—
Immortal—pure—almost omnipotent—
—Say—is not this a God ?”

The poet applies to Hesiod the title in the text in reference to his Ἔργα καὶ Ἡμέραι ; through which the Muses were his guides, whereas Juno vouchsafed to in-because Hesiod was born at As-

65. Herculis uxor. Hebe, the daughter of Jupiter and Juno, or of Juno only ; whence Junonia Hebe ; Val. Flacc. viii. 231. She was the goddess of youth, and as such, called by the Latins, Juventas or Juventa. On account of her remarkable beauty she was appointed cup-bearer to the gods by Jupiter, who deprived her of the office afterwards, and bestowed it on Ganymede. When Hercules, after his decease, became a deity, Juno's enmity against him entirely ceased, and she gave him Hebe in marriage, by whom he had two sons, Alexiars and Anicetus.

Prima dies tibi, Carna, datur. Dea cardinis hæc est.

80. Captas boves. Fast. i. 493, et seq.

81. Dote paterna. Ibid. 521.

83. Digessit ab annis. According to their age.

88. Qui fuit ante, senum. In allusion to May having been so called from Majores. See Fast. v. 73.

89. Issent. Juno and Hebe.

92. Ducis. Tiberius, who built the temple of Concord, Fast. i. 573.

97. Triplex. By Juno, Hebe, and Concord.

99. Perierunt iudice formæ. Supr. n. 15.

100. Plus lædunt, &c. Juno and Minerva having conspired for the destruction of Troy, which Venus was unable to protect.

101. Carna. On the kalends of June the festival of this deity was celebrated. She was a nymph of the grove of Helernus or Hilerna, anciently called Crane or Crane, and by metathesis, Carne or Carna. She was generally engaged in the chase, and from the purity and simplicity of her life was considered the sister of Diana ; but having been betrayed by the artifices of Janus, he requited the loss of her innocence by appointing her to preside over doors, &c. whence Dea cardinis ; and the exterior of houses, whence she was to remove all noxious birds, &c. Some suppose that Carda, or Cardea was the title of the goddess of hinges, and that Carna had a different province, that of guarding the heart and stomach ; the poet, however, combines those offices in the one deity. Her worship was ordained at Rome, and her festival celebrated on the Cælian mount, by Junius Brutus, pursuant to a vow which he had plighted on the expulsion of Tarquin.

113. Spinam. The efficacy which the ancients attached to the white thorn has been already remarked.

115. Non quæ Phineïa, &c. They were not the Harpies who were sent by Juno to pollute and plunder the temples of Phineus, to avenge the cruelty which he exercised toward his sons by Cleobula, Plexippus and Pandion, in putting out their eyes at the instigation of their step-mother, Idæa, who accused them falsely. He was subsequently delivered from them by Calais and Zethes, in requital for some important information which he gave to the Argonauts on the subject of their celebrated expedition, as, owing to the advice of Phineus, it was made more certain of success.

According to Apollodorus, the Harpies, called by Hesiod Aello and Ocypete, were the offspring of Thaumasp and Electra. Valerius Flaccus makes them the daughters of Typhon. Aello is said to have fallen, in her flight, into the river Tigris, in the Moorea, thence called Harpys. Ocypete having passed over the Propontis, arrived at the island Echinades, called afterwards Strophades, from Gr. στρόφις, because wearied with fatigue she turned to the shore and dropped down. Apollonius Rhodius mentions that they both reached the Strophades, where they were allowed to remain in safety, having sworn to their pursuers that they would not molest Phineus more.

117. Grande caput. The poet proceeds to describe the stria or screech-owl, Gr. στρίξ from στρίζω, strideo, infr. 140. What is stated of this bird in the text agrees closely with the description of the Vespertilio vampyrus of Linnæus, the la rusette or rougette of Buffon ; a species of bat with large canine teeth, sharp, black beak, the claws very strong and hooked. They inhabit Guinea, Madagascar, and all the islands from thence to the remotest in the Indian Ocean. Buffon supposes that they were not unknown to the ancients, and that they gave rise to the fictions of the Harpies. Linnæus calls this species of bat the vampyre, conjecturing it to be the kind which draws blood from any it can find asleep. It bleeds so dexterously that it inserts its aculeated tongue into the vein without causing any pain, and then sucks the blood until it is sated ; all the while fanning the air with its broad wings, so as to cast the sufferer into a still sounder sleep. *Pennant's Hist. 125. Sive igitur nascuntur aves. &c. Whether they are actually birds, or are made so by enchantments, carmine fiunt ; the ancients having believed such a metamorphose possible, as that mentioned infr. 126.

126. Næniaque Marsa. The Marsi were celebrated for sorceries, having been, according to Gellius, descended from Marsus, the son of Circe ; whence Horace, Epod. 5, 75, 'Nec vocata mens tua Marsis redibit vocibus,' and 17, 29, 'Caputque Marsa dissilire nænia.' Striges and Striga were terms in use with the ancients to signify hags or witches ; whence Isidorus, in Gloss. ; 'Striges, mulieres volaticæ ;' so called from their power of assuming the shape of a bird.

162. Ante. Heinsius conjectures Afra or Inda, either of which would agree with the import of miserat, by which it is to be understood that the delicacies alluded to came from abroad ; so *Virg. 169. Qui Gallica quondam. M. Manlius was alarmed by the cackling of the geese in the temple of Juno, in time to hurl from the walls the Gaul who had already ascended, whose fall precipitated those who were climbing after him, and so the Capitol was saved. He was rewarded by a donation of half a pound of corn and a quart of wine from each individual in the citadel ; no slight token of respect and regard from those who were suffering severely from the great scarcity of provision ; he received also in remembrance of this achievement the surname Capitolinus. His disposition was naturally turbulent and envious, and he suffered himself to be led away so far as to aim at exciting discontent between the patricians and plebeians. He was convicted of having falsely accused some of the nobility, and was imprisoned in consequence, by A. Cornelius Cossus, who had been appointed dictator to take charge of a war with the Volsci, and to quell the commotions caused by Manlius at Rome. Having been set at liberty, he continued his seditious proceedings, and aspired at last to sovereign power, for which he was condemned to be thrown from the Tarpeian rock, the scene of his glory having been chosen for the punishment of his guilt. Virg. Æneid, viii. 652, Liv. v. 31, et seq.

175. Lux eadem Marti festa. On the kalends of June, a sacrifice was offered to Mars, outside the Porta Capena, where his temple stood.

176. Tectæ viæ. Some copies read rectæ, others dextræ, but the commentators by whom these emendations are proposed, do not attempt to support them. The text seems unobjectionable as it stands, taking tectæ in the sense of paved ; no uncommon application of the term ; Hist. de Bell. Alexand. ‘Alexandriæ ædificia tecta sunt rudere, aut pavimentis.’ sc. a stone-floor, Forcel. Auct. de B. Hispan. ‘Omnia loca rudere non tegulis teguntur ;’ sc. are floored with rubbish instead of tiles. Stephanns, in Thes. Ling. Lat. explains tectorium, from tego, as a mortar composed of lime and sand ; arenatum, hoc est quod fit ex calce et arena ; as opposed to marmoratum, which was made of lime and marble dust, of which, with some other ingredients, the hardest cement was formed. The Appian way, that alluded to in the text, called, κατ’ ἔζοχον, Regina viarum, Liv. ix. 29, was paved with the hardest flint so firmly, that in several places it is still entire, after an interval of above 2000 years, since it was first constructed by Appius Claudius, the censor, A. U. 441. The stones of which it was formed were of different sizes, but so skilfully joined, that they appeared as but one stone. There were two strata underneath ; the first stratum of rough stones cemented with mortar, and the second with gravel ; the whole about three feet thick. Adam’s R. Antiq. Boyd’s edit. pp. 495–6. From the foregoing it may probably be allowed that Tectæ viæ admits of the sense proposed above.

177. Tempestas. A temple was built in honour of this deity by L. Scipio, the colleague of C. Aquilius Florus in the consulship, B. C. 261, in gratitude for the escape of his fleet from the effects of a violent storm while laying siege to Sardinia and Corsica ; both of which islands he laid

181. Postera lux. On the iv. Non. Jun. the Hyades rise heliacally. Taurinæ cornua frontis. A synonym for Hyadas, as they were situated in the forehead of the Bull.

183. Mane ubi bis fuerit, sc. Prid. Id. Jun. a temple was consecrated to Bellona, the sister and wife of Mars, and goddess of war ; called also Duellona, as duellum for bellum infr. 185, near the Circus Maximus, in front of the Porta Carmentalis. It had been vowed by Appius Claudius Cæcus during a war with the Etrurians, Liv. x. In this temple the senate gave audience to foreign ambassadors, and others who were not allowed admission into the city ; the ninth district in which this temple was situated, not having been considered a part of the metropolis itself.

187. Pyrrho qui pace negata. Pyrrhus, king of Epirus afforded assistance to the Tarentini on the occasion of war having been declared against them by the Romans. Upon his arrival in Italy he was joined by the Samnites, Lucani, and Brutii, with whom he overran the greater part of the country. He then offered peace to the Romans on condition of his being allowed to retain the possessions he had acquired by his conquests ; they were dissuaded from accepting his proposals by Appius, of whom Valerius Maximus writes ; ‘Qui fessus jam vivendo, lectica se in Curiam deferri jussit, ut cum Pyrrho deformem pacem fieri prohiberet. Hunc cæcum aliquis nominet, a quo Patria, quod honestum erat, parum per se cernens, coacta est pervidere ?’

189. Summum Circum. The extreme part of the Circus. Area. The court in front of the temple.

190. Parva columna. When the Romans considered themselves injured by any nation in such a manner as to require redress, they sent one or more of the Feciales to demand it, allowing thirty-three days for the consideration of their claim. The Feacial order of priesthood was instituted by Numa Pompilius, and borrowed, according to Dionysius, from the Greeks ; See Liv. i. 24, and xxxvi. 3. To this order was assigned every thing relating to the proclamation of war, and concluding of treaties. Accordingly at the expiration of the period alluded to, if their appeal had been ineffectual, the Feciales went again to the confines of the aggressors, and having thrown a spear dipped in blood across the boundaries, made a declaration of war. Liv. i. 32. In later times, when the boundaries of the Roman empire became so widely extended, and their arms were carried beyond the seas, it was found impossible to adhere so strictly to the above custom ; its spirit and intention, however, were preserved by the erection of a small pillar, parva columna, called also bellica, in front of the temple of Bellona, over which the priest threw the spear into a field called Ager Hostilis, to signify the commencement of hostilities. The form of words in which the declaration was made, was called Clarigatio ; a clara voce qua utebatur, Serv. Virg. Æneid, ix. 52, x. 14, whence also clarigatum, i. e. res raptas clare repetitum.

193. Altera pars Circi. The Circus Flaminius contained also the temple of Hercules Magnus, as appears from a fragment of the old kalendar ; HERCULI MAGNO CUSTODI IN CIRCO FLAMINO.

194. Euboico carmine. Pursuant to the direction of the Cumæan Sibyl, in compliance with which the temple was built. Neapolis conjectures that there were two temples of Hercules in the Circus Flaminius, one built by the senate, that mentioned above, and the other by Fulvius Nobilior, which was subsequently restored by Philip, the step-father of Augustus ; infr. 744. Munus. sc. the temple.

195. Muneris est tempus. This temple was dedicated Prid. Non. Jun.

196. Si titulos quæris, &c. ‘If you require the superscription, &c. Probatit. This term was peculiar to the office of the Censors, who having the charge of the public buildings, temples, &c. agreed for their erection, and sanctioned them, if deserving, with their approval when completed ; probaverunt i. e. recte et ex ordine facta esse pronuntiaverunt. In this sense it must be applied to Sylla in the text. According to Plutarch, he dedicated the tenth part of his immense wealth to Hercules, in whose honour he celebrated sumptuous public festivals — Ἀποθύων δὲ τῆς οὐσίας ἀπάσης ὁ Σύλλας τῷ Ἡρακλεῖ δεκάτην, ἐστιάσεις, ποιεῖτο τῷ δήμῳ πολυτελεῖς. It was usual for those who had obtained great riches, to devote a tenth to Hercules, as the possessors were believed to be indebted to him for the whole; whence, Horat. Sat. ii. 6, 12, ‘Dives amico Hercule.’ Pers. 2, 12, ‘O si sub rastro crepet argenti mihi seria dextro Hercule;’ and because that deity was said to have been pleased with a moderate use of his behests.

197. Quærebam Nonas, &c. On the Nones, a temple had been dedicated to Sancus, Fidius, or Semo; the poet is at a loss to which of them he should appropriate the day, until informed that the three names belonged to the one deity, Sancus. This was the Sabine name for Hercules; it is written also Sangus, and Sanctus, but more correctly as above. This deity was so called a sanciendo; Propert. iv. 10, sub. fin. ‘Nunc quoniam manibus purgatum sanxerat orbem sic Sancum Tatiae composuere Cures.’ Sabus, from whom the Sabines are said to have derived their name; Sil. Ital. viii. 423, ‘—pars laudes ore ferebant Sabe tuas: qui de patrio cognomine primus Dixisti populos magnitudine Sabinos;’ was the son of Sancus Dionys. Halic. Antiq. ii. 51. Fidius or Dius Fidius is applied to Hercules as the son of Jove, Dijovis filius; in like manner as the Greeks called Castor Δίοςκουρον, l having been changed into d. Hence arose the oath Me-

dus Fidius, i. e. Me dius Fidius juvet; as mehercules, mecustor, i. e. me Hercules, me Castor juvet or amet. Some however explain medius, by the Greek μὲν Δία, per Jovem; others by medius fidius understand, per divi fidem, or per diurni temporis, i. e. diei fidem. Fidius is further explained by fidus or fidelis from the Διὸς Πίστιος, Dius Fidius, of the Greeks. Semo is a contraction of Semi-homo, or semihemo; hemonem occurring for hominem, Enn. apud Priscian. vi. p. 683. Putsch.; as nemo from ne homo or hemo, and was used by the ancients to express a deified mortal, the ἥρωες of the Greeks; it was applied to Hercules in reference to his having been enrolled among the gods after he had terminated his earthly career. For Semo pater, 198, some copies read Semipater, but incorrectly.

201. Donarunt æde Sabini. The poet differs in thus attributing the founding of this temple to the Sabines, from the historian Dionysius, who asserts it to have been built by Tarquinius Superbus on the Quirinal hill, ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἐνναλίου λόφου; but the credit of its consecration was, by a decree of the senate, given to the consul Spurius Postumius, A. U. 298, probably from dislike to Tarquin.

 Detulerit flavis in mare Thybris aquis ;
 Non mihi detonsos crines depectere buxo,
 Non unguis ferro subsecuisse licet :

203. Est mihi filia, &c. In different parts of his compositions the poet speaks in affectionate terms of his daughter Perilla ; the seventh elegy in the third book of the Tristia is addressed to her, and contains directions for her mental improvement, with encouragement to aim at the immortality which taste and genius only can confer ; ‘—nil non mortale tenemus, Pectoris exceptis ingeniique bonis.’ Trist. 7. 43, et seq. She was twice married ; ‘Filia me mea bis prima fecunda juventa, Sed non ex uno conjuge fecit avum.’ Trist. One of her husbands appears to have been a senator ; Senec. de Constant. Sapient. xvii. ‘In senatu flentem vidimus Fidum Cornelium, Nasonis generum.’

206. Cavenda. Timenda. Bernens.

207. Post sacras Idus. It was considered inauspicious to marry previous to the ides of June, the remaining portion of the month was not liable to this objection. Heinsius proposes to read post actas idus, as the text seems to contradict what has been stated Fast. i. xxi. 58, 59 ; where it appears that the days immediately after the kalends, nones and ides were reckoned unlucky, so that the day after the ides of June could not be said, utilis esse nuptis, &c. Besides from x. 213, infr. it is evident that the day alluded to, xviii. Kal. Jul. is included among the dies atri, so that post sacras idus must be taken in a more extended sense, as referring to the concluding part of the month, and not to the day succeeding the ides.

Tantæ sanctitatis majores nostri esse judicaverunt.’ Festus : with whom Varro agrees as to the place in which those cleansings were deposited. The poet, as it appears, differs from both ; see also infr. 655. It is evident both from the above and what follows, that up to the xvii. Kal. Jul. it was unlawful to contract marriage.

213. Detonsos crines depectere. To dress or trim the hair after it had been cut ; Burmann explains

Non tetigisse virum ; quamvis Jovis ille sacerdos, 215
 Quamvis perpetua sit mihi lege datus.

236. Purpurea luce. Flame-coloured light.

237. Non equidem vidi, &c. See infr. 277. Valeant mendacia vatum. Farewell to the poets' fictions.

241. Dena quater memorant, &c. After forty anniversaries of the Palilia, Fast. iv. 695, i.e. v.c. 40, the worship of Vesta was introduced by Numa into Rome; whence Regis opus placidi, &c.

247. Qui sustinet atria Vestæ. The atrium was that part of the regia, in which the Vestal virgins lived; the poet appears to identify them.

249. Forma tamen templi, &c. The temple was round, for the reasons subjoined.

251. Vesta eadem est, quæ Terra. See Fast. i. n. 478, and iii. n. 45. also infr. vs. 275, and 414,

 Nec medium terram mundus haberet onus. 260
 Arte Syracosia suspensus in aëre clauso where the poet appears to confound Vesta, the earth, with Vesta, the principle of fire.

252. Significant, &c. The earth being in the centre of the world, and the fire of Vesta in the middle of the temple mutually intimate their respective positions.

254. Aëre subjecto. The earth having been entirely encompassed by the aer, or atmosphere ; aer is derived by some ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀέρος, quod terram ferat, vel quod ab ipsa feratur ; see N. 261, infr. a med. an etymology which suits the text as supr. Others derive it from ἀήμι, spiro or ἀεὶ ῥέειν, semper fluere.

255. Ipsa volubilitas, &c. This, and the five following lines, are not to be found in the oldest and most authentic copies. They are intended to express the earth's being kept in equilibrium by its roundness, volubilitas ; there being no angle to make it bear in any direction unequally, Quique premat partes, &c.

257. Rerum. Of the system.

259. Ni convexa foret, &c. The poet is desirous to shew that in order to its being the exact centre of the system, the earth must be round ; otherwise it would not be the medium onus of the universe. Parti may be used for parte, 'in some degree,' as Plaut. Men. 3, 2, 14, 'Satur nunc loquitur de me, et de parti mea.'

260. Mundus. qu. movendus, quia non alius est, quam quod moveri possit ; Festus ; the universe ; '— ingens illud corpus cælo terraque constans, perfectum undique, itaque omnia in se complexus ;' Forcel. and Cic. de Nat. Deor. ii. 14, 'ut nihil sit, quod non insit in eo ;' sc. mundo.

261. Arte Syracosia. Archimedes, one of the most distinguished geometricians of antiquity, was a native of Syracuse, born B. C. 291. He is said to have formed a sphere of exquisite workmanship, by means of which he illustrated the relative positions and movements of the earth, planets, &c. ; upon which Claudian composed the well-known epigram ; 'Jupiter in parvo cum cerneret æthera vitro Risit et ad superos talia dicta dedit,' &c. Hence it would appear to have been formed of glass, but some authorities are opposed to this ; Lactantius, lib. ii. cap. v. writes as follows ; 'Archimedes Siculus concavo ære similitudinem ac figuram potuit machinari, in quo ita Solem Lunamque composuit ;' &c. Sextus Empiricus states it to have been made of wood, and Cælius Rhodiginus, of brass ; 'Archimedis ingenium divinum, in mundi opificio Deum, fere ipsum lacessere visum est, quando tam concinne Cælum conflassæ æreum memoratur,' &c. Of whatever material it may have been constructed, the concluding part of the line in aere clauso has nothing to say to it, although these words are explained by an acute critic as referring to the 'sphere having been enclosed in a glass-case!' How this allusion is to be made reconcilable to the sense of the terms, does not so immediately appear. Some of the classical commentators explain in aere clauso, by in ipsa templi concavitate; others by ambitu cœlestium circum-lorum · hoc est, quibus Archimedes cœlorum motus imitatus est. Ovid. Op. Francof. apud Claud. Marn. Ed. 1601; while the greater number either pass the difficulty altogether, or account for it unsatisfactorily. The latter of the two senses given above seems not inconsistent with the signification of aer as given by Cicero; 'elementum illud, quod medium spatium complet inter cœlum, et terram;' whence by aere clauso may be understood the air, in which the terra or centre of the system according to Archimedes, stood; and which was enclosed between it and the orbits in which the planets were made to move. This sense is further confirmed by the description of the sphere as given by Martianus Capella, Satyricon &c. lib. vi. 'Tellus quæ rapidum consistens suscipit orbem Puncti instar medio hæserat ima loco. Hanc tenet et vitreis (inconstant) circumvolitabilis auris Aer complectens imbrificabat aquis;' and again; 'Texerat exterior qui fulget, circulus orbis Ætheris astrifico sidera multa peplo;' upon which Cicero may again be quoted in illustration of the sense as above proposed; 'Aerem amplectitur immensus æther qui constat altissimus ignibus,' and again; 'Restat ultimus omnia cingens et coercens cœli complexus qui idem æther vocatur.' Hence aere clauso may be explained as the air or atmosphere, in which the earth was supposed to rest, as supr. 254, and which was consequently enclosed between the earth and the cælum or æther, in which the paths of the planets were described.

263. Et quantum a summis, &c. Supr. 259.

266. Tholus. A cupola; whence the temple was called Ναὸς θολοειδής.

267. Cur sit virgineis, &c. The poet gives two reasons for Vesta's having been attended by virgins; one, because she was unmarried herself, the other because she is identified with fire, from which nothing is produced; to which two others may be added from Cicero; 'Vestæ colendæ virgines præsumt, ut advigiletur facilius ad custodiam ignis, et sentiant mulieres in natura feminarum omnem castitatem pati.'

271. Utraque. Juno and Ceres.

De tribus impatiens restitit una viri.
 Quid mirum, virgo si virgine læta ministra
 Admittit castas in sua sacra manus?
 Nec tu aliud Vestam, quam vivam intellige flammam. 275

 Ante focos olim longis considerare scamnis

277. Esse diu stultus Vestæ, &c.
 See Fast. i. n. 477, and Fast. iii. n. 45. The worship of Vesta, and the Eternal Fire, as has been elsewhere observed, was introduced into Rome by Numa; 'a prince,' as Spence remarks, 'who was too philosophical to admit of any statues at all, either as the objects of devotion, or as helps to it. He thought that method more likely to debase the gods than to assist mankind;' in proof of which may be adduced the following passage from Plutarch; in Num. p. 65, Ed. Steph. Par. 1624; Διεκώλυσεν ἀνθρώποιδῃ καὶ ζωόμορφον εἰκόνα θεοῦ τοῖς Ῥωμαίοις νομίζεσθαι, οὐδ' ἦν παρ' αὐτοῖς οὔτε γραπτὸν, οὔτε πλαστὸν εἶδος θεοῦ πρότερον. 'Ἄλλ' ἑκατὸν ἑβδομήκοντα τοῖς πρώτοις ἔτεσι ναοὺς μὲν οἰκοδομοῦμενοι διέτελουν, καὶ καλιαδάς ἱερὰς ἰστῶντες, ἀγαλμα δὲ οὐδὲν ἑμμορφον ποιούμενοι διετίλουν; whence it may be concluded that Vesta, as identified with the eternal fire, was only worshipped under such a semblance.

281. Vi stando Vesta vocatur.
 See Fast. i. n. 478, sub. fin.

283. Focus. Derived by the poet, qu. fovicus, a fovendo; as cherishing the fire, or other things by the fire which it contains. It may also come from φῶς; one of the senses of φῶς, according to Donnegan, being, 'a blazing hearth;' as specus, from σπίος. Others derive it from φωγω, to roast, or boil.

284. Primis ædibus. The vestibulum, infr. so called, according to the poet, from its having been consecrated to Vesta, 286, infr. from which it may be derived, as thuribulum from thus; thuris. Here also the fire was kept burning.

285. Inde precando, &c. Thence in supplication we address Vesta, 'O thou who dwellest in the porch.' This was doubtless the commencement of a form of prayer used at the sacred rites of that deity. Various emendations are proposed for Affamur Vestam, 286, which appears much less objectionable however than any of the suggested corrections.

287. Longis considerare scamnis.
 The Romans originally sat at their meals, and also the Greeks ; Hom. Odyss. i. iii. &c. Tac. Mor. Ger. 22, so Isidorus, in Varr. vit. Pop. Roman. 'Majores nostri sedentes epulabantur ; quem morem habuerunt a Laconibus et Cretensibus.' The custom of reclining on couches was introduced from the east, and at first was only adopted by men, but was subsequently allowed to women. Scamnum, literally a stool, or small flight of steps, is to be understood in the text as a bench or form.

289. Vacunæ. The goddess of leisure and indolence ; she is identified by some with Diana, or Ceres, by others with Venus. After the harvest had been gathered in, she was worshipped by the husbandmen, chiefly among the Sabines, in sign of their repose through the ensuing winter. She had a temple and an annual festival at Rome.

291. De more vetusto. This is to be taken in reference to what follows ; the ancient custom of making an offering at all sacrifices to Vesta having been adhered to at the Ludi Pistorii ; whence Inde focum servat pistor, &c. 299, infr.

293. Ecce coronatis panis, &c. In allusion to the custom of ornamenting with garlands of flowers such animals as were required to take part in the festival of any deity ; see Fast. i. 599.

295. Sola prius furnis torrebant, &c. See Fast. ii. s. 407.

297. Suppositum cineri panem, &c. Formerly, the poet says, they only used the furni, or ovens, for drying the grain, while the bread was baked between pieces of broken tiles, tegulæ quassæ, over and under which were strewed hot embers from the hearth ; whence Inde focum servat, &c. There were no bakers at Rome before A. U. 580 ; the Romans, chiefly the women, made their own bread.

299. Dominamque focorum.—Vesta.

300. Pumiceas. Rough as pumice-stone ; scabras, supr. 294.

301. De pane monilibus ornas.

ARA JOVI PISTORI POSITA.

Nomine, quam pretio, celebratior arce Tonantis, Dicam, Pistoris quid velit ara Jovis.
 Cincta premebantur trucibus Capitolia Gallis : 305

 Et dolor hic animi voce querentis eget ? 310
 Si tamen, ut referam breviter mala juncta pudori,

 Hæc est, cui fuerat promissa potentia rerum,

In allusion to a species of loaf in the form of a ring, which used to be put over the head of the ass, and worn like a collar round the neck. Flavius Vopiscus describes a nearly similar kind of loaf, when referring to the distribution of bread to the people by the emperor Aurelian ; ‘ Non prætermittendum videtur coronas eum fecisse de panibus qui nunc siliginei (made of siligo, or fine wheat) vocantur, et singulis quibusque donasse, ita ut siligineum suum quotidie toto ævo suo, et unusquisque reciperet, et posteris suis dimitteret.’

303. Nomine quam pretio celebratior, &c. More distinguished in name than in fact. The poet proceeds to account for the erection of the altar to Jupiter Pistor. Niebuhr, Rom. Hist. vol. ii. 546. ‘ The famine (during the siege of the Capitol by the Gauls) had reached such a height, that the besieged had begun to eat the leather of their shields and the soles of their shoes, when the Gauls gave ear to an offer of a sum of money as the price of their evacuating the city. So long as they hoped by perseverance to gain possession of all the treasures in the Capitol, as well as of captives of rank, who would have been ransomed by such of their relations as had made their escape, or by their friends in other cities, they had scorned every proposal calling on them to be satisfied with a part. But their host was melting away: they received intelligence that the Venetians, taking advantage of the absence of their fighting men, had invaded their territory: and if Brennus had sent a portion of his troops back to the Po, the forces collected at Veii might easily have relieved the city. As the Moors in the Spanish ballad, when the knight, after a seven years’ siege, threw the only loaf in his castle at them, abandoned their undertaking and decamped, so the Roman lays fabled that Jupiter in a vision prompted the distressed garrison to bake their whole stock of flour into bread, and to pelt the loaves like stones at the besiegers, that they obeyed his behest, and that the Gauls were thus led to believe that their enemies were rolling in abundance. It was agreed that they should receive a thousand pounds of gold to quit Rome and its territory.’

315. Suburbanos. The Romans had already conquered the Sabines, Ceninenses, Fidenates, Volsci, &c. Hetruscaque arma. Falisci and Veii.

316. Spes erat in cursu. The hope of extending the limits of the empire was in progress towards fulfilment. Nunc Lare pulsa suo est. Because the citizens were driven from their abodes to take refuge in the Capitol.

317. Ærata per atria. The halls, whose doors were covered or adorned with brass; so Horat. Od. ii. 16, 21, 'æratæ naves;' Virg. Æneid, viii. 675, 'ærata classis:' vessels whose prows were protected and decorated with brass. Forcel. See Æneid, i. 448, and Heyne's note, in loc. Reserata atria. Al. Picta veste. Προξυοῶν ασπιδων χρυσαυν ενφασμενον. Appian. Triumphales occubuisse senes. Called by Plutarch, in Camill. θριαμβικῶν; ἄνδρας, in allusion to picta veste sup. the triumphal robe of purple and gold tissue. It is not certain whether the massacre of the senate by the Gauls took place in the Forum or in the Comitium; according to Plutarch, in the former. Niebuhr describes it as follows, ii. 541. 'When the Gauls had broke into the city through the Colline gate, they found it all desolate and deathlike: they were seized with that awe which comes upon a stranger on passing in summer through a town in a high northern latitude at midnight, when all is clear as day, yet no mark of life to be seen in the streets. Every house was closed: they marched onward till they came to the Forum. Here they saw the armed men above in the citadel; and in the Comitium the aged chiefs of the senate, looking like beings of another world. In doubt whether the gods were not come down to save Rome or to avenge it, a Gaul went up to one of the priests, M. Papirius, and stroked his white beard: the old man indignantly struck him on the head with his ivory sceptre; the barbarian cut him down, and all were massacred.

319. Vidimus Iliacæ, &c. Plutarch, ibid. Τὸ δὲ πῦρ τῆς 'Εστίας αἱ παρθένοι μετὰ τῶν ἱερῶν ἀρπασάμενοι ἔφυγον. Liv. 'Placuit Flaminem sacerdotesque Vestales sacra publica a cæde, ab incendiis procul auferre.' Transferri. To Cære, in Etruria, where those who fled with the Roman gods and the sacred fire of Vesta were hospitably received. In requital, the senate, at the suggestion of Camillus, decreed that a league should be formed with the inhabitants of the town, and the freedom of the city granted them; a privilege which they subsequently forfeited by a revolt. Hence, when the censors deprived a citizen of the right to vote, his name was said to be entered in the register of the Cærites; so Horat. Epist. i. 6, 62, 'Quid deceat, quid non, obliti Cærite cera Digni.'

320. Putant aliquos scilicet esse Deos? The note of interrogation is correctly subjoined to this sentence which, with the following, amounts to this; Do they, sc. the Gauls, imagine that there are any gods?—if so, looking to the straits to which you, the deities, and your worshippers are reduced, they must have little confidence in the providence which has failed to protect its votaries.

329. Lituo. The crooked staff with which the augurs marked out the quarters of the heavens; from Gr. λίτος, thin, slender.

334. Sedes tuas. Latium tuum. Ambros. and Læt.

335. Cereris solidæ. Corn not yet ground. Cava machina. The mill; so called because the lower stone was slightly hollowed; whence its name catillus, dimin. of catinus, a dish or platter. ‘Inferius molæ saxum appellatur catillus, quia contrita grana ad modum catini ora cavata et exstante continet.’ Forcel.

336. Mollitamque. Kneaded.

337. Virgo Saturnia. Vesta.

342. Quam minime perdere vultis. Such equivoques were not unusual with Jupiter; see Fast. iii. 335, et seq.

345. Ceres visa est. The loaves which had been baked.

Jacta super galeas scutaque longa sonant.

348. Pistori. From pinso or piso, to bruise or grind.

344. Forte revertebar festis Vestalibus, &c. The poet proceeds to mention a circumstance that befel him on the Vestalia, by which probably it was called to mind.

350. Qua Nova Romano nunc, &c. The Via Nova led from Velabrum to Rome; it was joined to the former and the Via Sacra; in its vicinity stood the statue of Vertumnus, infr. 363, and the temple of Vesta.

355. Hoc, ubi nunc fora sunt, &c. The old woman explains the cause of the poet's surprise. Fora. The Romanum, and Boarium, whose site had been a mere marsh owing to the overflowings of the Tiber.

357. Curtius ille lacus. Called also Curtilacus. Historians are not agreed as to the origin of this appellation. By some it is supposed to have been the scene of the self-devotion of Marcus Curtius; whose name it retained in memorial of his disinterested heroism. Others recount that during a battle with the Romans under Romulus, a Sabine soldier, by name Curtius, plunged into this marsh in order to approach the enemy more closely; which he was unable to effect by the sinking of his horse, which he abandoned, and secured his retreat to his own army; whence the name of the marsh, Curtius. Livy adopts the former of these opinions. Siccas qui sustinet aras. The Curtius lacus, having been drained, became the site of an altar; whence P. Victor; ‘Ara Saturni in lacu Curtii;’ or if aras is to be taken literally, it may allude to those of Augustus, and the Lares, as some conjecture from Suetonius.

359. Qua Velabra solent, &c. Triumphant processions passed through the Velabra into the Circus. It is used in the plural, because there was a greater and less Velabrum, lying between the Palatine and Capitoline hills. They were so called a vehendo, because formerly they were traversed in boats, and the freight was named velatura. So Varro, 'Palus fuit in minori Velabro, unde quod ibi velebantur lintribus, Velabrum ut illud majus.' Propert. 'Qua Velabra suo stagnabant flumine quaque Nauta per urbanas velificabat aquas.' The term is derived by some a velis, because oil, fruit, and other marketable commodities were sold there under awnings of sail-cloth, or in tents ; but the former is the preferable etymology.

362. Ad nautas ebria verba jacit. '—absentem ut cantat amicam Multa prolutus vappa nauta, atque viator Certatim.' Horat. Sat. i. 5, 15.

363. Conveniens diversis iste figuris. It was after the draining of the marsh alluded to, that the statue of Vertumnus was erected, so called, according to the poet ab averso amne, from having checked the inundations of the Tiber ; so Propertius, Eleg. iv. 2. 7, 'Hac quondam Tiberinus iter faciebat, et aiunt Remorum auditos per vada pulsa sonos. At postquam ille suis tantum concessit alumnis Vertumnus verso dicor ab amne deus.' By diversis figuris, the poet alludes to the variety of forms assumed by Vertumnus, while wooing the nymph Pomona ; Metam. xiv. 637, et seq. where this deity is described as the god of trees and fruits which ripen in autumn ; whence his name may be derived ; quod anni vertentis poma perciperet.' Forcel. According to some, he was the god of merchandise ; so called a vertendo, taken in its sense of trafficking, as Pers. Sat. 5, 137, 'Verte aliquid, jura.' Others make him the deity who presided over the thoughts, and so represented him as fickle and multi-form as the subjects of his influence ; whence Horat. Sat. ii. 7, 14, 'Vertumnis, quotquot sunt, natus iniquis.'

366. Pede velato. With covered foot.

368. Mos tamen inde manet. In memorial of its having been formerly a marsh.

371. Cætera jam pridem didici, &c. The poet now proceeds to give an account of the Palladium which, unlike the subjects he had previously discussed, he had been familiar with from his early years but not so as to diminish his sense of its importance ; Non tamen idcirco prætereunda, &c.

373. Dardanides Ilus. Ilus, the great grandson of Dardanus. Mœnia nova. Ilium.

375. Signum cœleste. Gr. Τὸ ἄγαλμα Παλλᾶδος ; the Palladium, called also Διοπετεῖς, because it was said to have fallen from heaven near the tent of Ilus, while engaged in building the citadel of Troy. According to others it fell at Pessinus in Phrygia, and another, made to imitate it, was placed in the temple of Minerva which the priests induced the people to believe was the real Palladium ; probably for the same reason which led Numa to secure the safety of the sacred shield ;
Fast. iii. 379. Various accounts are given of the image itself, and the manner in which it was obtained ; infr. 387. By some it is described as a wooden statue of the goddess, about three cubits high, holding in her right hand a pike, and in her left a spindle and distaff : by others, as formed of the bones of Pelops, and by Apollodorus, as a species of automaton. An ancient oracle declared that Troy could not be taken while the Palladium remained within the walls ; whence fatale Palladium ; Virg. Æneid. ii.
166, in consequence of which it was preserved with the utmost care. The Greeks sent Ulysses and Diomede to carry it away by night, which they accomplished, it is said, by means of Helenus.

The Romans, who boasted of their Trojan descent, were unwilling to allow that the Greeks obtained possession of the Palladium, and maintained that it was not the true one which was withdrawn from the temple of Minerva ; a difficulty, of which the poet hints at another solution
infr. 388. Dymock's Biblioth. Class.

377. Cura videre fuit. Ovid was sent, while very young, to Athens, where he studied for a considerable time. He subsequently, in company with L. Æmilius Macer, a cotemporary poet, whose premature death he bitterly laments, travelled over the greater part of Greece and Asia Minor, and doubtless examined with attention the interesting memorials which they every where presented of former times. Vidi templumque locumque. The original temple was destroyed before Ovid was born, by the consul C. Flavius Fimbria, who served with such success in Asia, and displayed considerable courage in his encounters with the armies of Pontus, having nearly made a prisoner of their sovereign Mithridates.
It was probably rebuilt, for Strabo speaks of a Palladium which occupied a similar position to the old one, in his own time.

379. Smintheus. Apollo ; so called from Gr. σμίνθος, or σμίνθις,

Hos non mentito reddidit ore sonos : 380 which, in the Phrygian dialect, signifies a mouse. It is said that Scamander, the son of Corybas and Demodice, having left Crete with a number of followers, consulted the oracle of Apollo where they might establish a colony, and was directed in reply, to settle wherever they found a quantity of mice. When they arrived in Phrygia, the strings of their bows and straps of their corslets were gnawed asunder by mice, whereupon Scamander planted his colony in that country, at the foot of Mount Ida, and erected a temple to Apollo Smintheus. One of the Scholiasts on Homer accounts for the name, from Apollo's having cleared the gardens and orchard of his priest Chryses, of the rats by which they were infested and laid waste.

386. Ex quo. sc. tempore. Suo. In allusion to Paris having been the son of Priam ; some copies read sua ; others tua, and in the preceding line volebas.

387. Genus Adrasti. Diomede, the grandson of Adrastus.

388. Datur. i. e. narratur.

389. Auctor. sc. rapiendi.

391. Heu quantum timuere Patres, &c. In allusion to the destruction of the temple of Vesta by fire, which occurred A.U. 512, in the consulship of Q. Lucatius and A. Manlius, when L. Cæcilius Metellus was Pontifex Maximus.

399. Pignora fatalia. The Palladium.

403. Haurit aquas. For purification.

VICTI CALLAICI.

- Tum sibi Callaïco Brutus cognomen in hoste 415
 Fecit, et Hispanam sanguine tinxit humum.

CRASSI CÆDES.

- Scilicet interdum miscentur tristia lætis ;
 Ne populum toto pectore festa juvent.
 Crassus ad Euphraten aquilas, natumque, suosque
 Perdidit, et leto est ultimus ipse datus. 420

406. Sit capitis damno, &c. Let Rome be absolved at the expense of my life.

407. Dixit, et irrupit, &c. Metellus rescued the Palladium, at considerable personal risk, with the loss of his sight, and consequently of his priesthood, as the law ordained SACERDOS INTEGRUS, in return for which a statue was erected to him in the Capitol, and he was allowed the peculiar privilege of being conveyed to the senate in a chariot.

409. Nunc bene lucetis. Because Augustus, as Pontifex Maximus, had enhanced the character and rights of the Vestals. Sueton i. c. 21.

412. Viva defodietur humo. In allusion to the punishment of a Vestal virgin for the violation of her vows.

415. Tum sibi Callaïco, &c. On the day of the Vestalia, A.U. 618, D. Junius Brutus overcame sixty thousand of the Callæci, a people who inhabited the north of Hither Spain, so called from Calle, now Oporto, an ancient city near the mouth of the river Durus, or Douro. Hence he obtained the surname Callaicus. They are called by some Gallæci, but incorrectly, as appears from the origin of their name.

417. Scilicet interdum, &c. Because on the same day Crassus was defeated by the Parthians, and he and his son were both slain.

420. Leto est ultimus. Crassus engaged with Surena, the general of the forces of Orodes, the Parthian king, in a large plain on the banks of the Euphrates ; after his defeat, he was induced to trust himself into the power of the enemy, on pretence of proposing terms of accommodation, and was immediatly put to death. His head was cut off, and sent to Orodus, who poured melted lead into his mouth, in mockery of his reputed thirst for gold. His son, Publius Crassus, was slain at the beginning of the encounter; whence leto ultimus ipse, &c.

421. Signa remittes. See Fast. v. 524.

423. At simul auritis demuntur, &c. On the iv. Id. Jun. the day after the Vestalia; in sign of whose termination their garlands were taken off, and the asses set to work in the mill again; the Dolphin rises in the evening.

427. Phryx. Because he was the son of Laomedon. On the iii. Id. Jun. the festival of matrons, Matralia, was celebrated, in honour of the goddess Matuta, infr. 433.

430. Flavaque liba. See infr. 485. Thebanæ Deæ. Ino; who was supposed to be the same as Matuta.

431. Pontibus et Magno, &c. The poet describes the site of Matuta's temple in the Forum Boarium, which was close to the Palatine bridge, and the Circus Maximus. She had another at Satricum, a town of the Volscians. Liv. v. 19, 23.

433. Hac ibi luce ferunt, &c. On the iii. Id. Jun. this temple was dedicated by Servius Tullius; it was subsequently rebuilt, after the taking of Veii, by M. Furius Camillus. Matutæ. The Latin name of Ino, who was called by the Greeks Leucothea; infr. 499. Both of the preceding appellations are applied by some writers to Aurora; whence Horat. Sat. ii. 6, 45. 'Matutina parum cautos jam frigora mordent,' and Lucret. v. 655, 'Tempore item certo roseam Matuta per oras Ætheris

There was another Matuta, a deity who presided over ripened grain, frumentis maturescentibus, as Flora over the blossom, Lacturcia over the green ears, fr. lactescentibus, and Runcina over the uprooted stubble, fr. runcatis.

435. Famulas arceat. See infr. 505.

437. Bacche. The poet applies to Bacchus for the required information and guidance, Si domus illa tua est. Because he was the son of Semele, Ino's sister. Dirige navis iter. Fast. i. 4. Some copies read vatis opus.

439. Arserat obsequio Semele Jovis. See Fast. iii. n. 403. Accipit Ino. See Fast. ii. n. 510. According to Apollonius, the nymph Matris, daughter of Aristæus, was the nurse of Bacchus, others say Dirce. The poet agrees in the account which is given in the text with that in the Hymns of Orpheus.

443. Imagine falsa. Athamas having been struck with madness by Juno, slew his son Learchus, supposing him to be a lion's whelp.

449. Est spatio contracta brevi, &c. The poet describes the Isthmus Achaicus, whence Ino plunged into the sea : it was very narrow, and extended only six thousand paces between the Ægean and Ionian seas.

451. Insanis. Because her act was that of a madwoman.

452. Celso jugo. The rock Moluris.

453. Panope, centumque sorores. Panope was the daughter of Nereus and Doris, by whom, with her hundred sister-Nereids, Ino and Melicerta, were conveyed safely over the sea.

455. Nondum Leucothee, &c. Before Ino and Melicerta had been acknowledged as deities; called by the Greeks Leucothee and Palæmon; their Latin appellations having been Matuta and Portunus.

457. Lucus erat, &c. Their wanderings closed at Latium, where they were kindly received by Nicostrata, the mother of Evander, and subsequently became the objects of Arcadian worship. Semelæ Stimulæne. The poet doubts whether this grove was sacred to the mother of Bacchus, or the goddess Stimula, in reference to whom the Scholiast upon Juvenal, Sat. 2, 3, writes; 'Bacchanalia Romæ condemnata fuisse, cum probatum esset Senatui, honestissimas feminas ad Stimulæ deæ lucum fœde adulterari.'

458. Mænadas Ausonias. The Latin bacchanals.

461. Dissimulata Deam. Having disguised her divinity.

466. Pignus habet. Alluding to Melicerta.

470. Quos ignorat adhuc. As Ino was a stranger in Latium.

472. Aventini. See Fast. i. N. 501. and 472, infr.

473. Appulerat ripæ, &c. Hercules, (called Cætæus, proleptically; Cæta, a mountain in Thessaly, having been the place where, by his own directions, his body was burned after his decease) had just arrived in Italy with the herds which he had taken from Geryon; see Fast. i. N. 493; in time to afford Ino the assistance she required.

477. Matertera Bacchi. Ino was said to have been the sister of Semele.

478. An numen quod me, &c.
 In allusion to the enmity of Juno against Hercules.

479. Partim præsentia nati.
 She was ashamed to avow before her son, that she had made an attempt at their mutual destruction by plunging with him into the sea.

481. Rumor ut est velox. Ino and her child having been saved by the interference of Hercules, her name spread quickly through Latium ; her reception by Evander's mother, and the prophecy by the latter of their future greatness, 497 infra, are detailed in the text.

 Matuta, but she was always so

Hanc tibi, Quo properas? memorant dixisse, Rutili; Luce mea Marso Consul ab hoste cades.

that it was not owing to any inclination of the goddess in her favour.

507. Cadmeï. Ino, daughter of Cadmus.

510. Comperit agricolis. See Fast. ii. n. 510.

513. Non tamen pro stirpe sua, &c. According to the poet, mothers were not to address prayers to the goddess Matuta for the safety of their children; Ino having been so unfortunate as to have lost one, Learchus, and suffered much with the other; whence Ipsa parum felix, &c. But mothers might pray for their daughters' and sisters' children; Alterius prolem melius, &c. Ino having been more successful in her care of her sister Semele's son, than of her own; Utilior Baccho, &c.

517. Hanc. Matuta; who, according to the poet, warned Rutilius of his disastrous defeat on the III. Id. Jun. the day of the Matralia; whence Luce mea.

518. Marso ab hoste. The Social, or Marsian war, so called because it originated with the Marsi, who claimed the privilege of Roman citizenship, in consequence of the many services they had conferred upon the Roman state, which refused to acknowledge their pretensions, although urged with all the eloquence and interest of M. Livius Drusus, then in his tribuneship, B. C. 93. The Marsi were joined in this war against the Romans by all the states to the south of the Liris; and carried it on with great success for three years, during which the Roman generals were repeatedly defeated, as P. Rutilius Lupus, supr. who took the field as consul with eight thousand men, A. U. 664. They were finally reduced to submission, more by policy than valour; the Romans having offered their allies the rights for which the Marsi were contending, the latter were too much weakened to maintain the war by themselves. It came in consequence to a close, but an honorable one for the Marsi, as their object was subsequently obtained; the inhabitants of all the states of Italy having been invested with the citizenship of Rome.

FORTUNÆ ÆDES DICATA.

Lux eadem, Fortuna, tua est, auctorque, locusque
 Sed superinjectis quis latet æde togis ?
 Servius est ; hoc constat enim ; sed causa latendi 525
 Discrepat : et dubium me quoque mentis habet.
 Dum dea furtivos timide profitetur amores,
 Cælestemque homini concubuisse pudet ;
 Arsit enim magno correpta cupidine regis,
 Cæcaque in hoc uno non fuit illa viro ; 530
 Nocte domum parva solita est intrare fenestra :
 Unde Fenestellæ nomina porta tenet.

519. Tolenum. Or Telonus, a river of the Marsi.

521. Proximus annus erat. In the year following that on which Rutillius was defeated, on the same day, Pallantide eadem, Fast. iv. n. 347, Didius, who, according to Appian, was Prætor during the Marsian war, was also overcome. He is supposed to have been the T. Didius who, as proprætor, gained some advantages over the Scordisci, B. C. 114, and fourteen years after held the consulship with Q. Cæcilius Metellus Nepos. When proconsul he conquered the Celtiberi. He and his colleague passed a law, regulating the method of proposing and passing laws, which was called after them Lex Cæcilia Didia. He is alluded to by Sallust, Frag. 1.

523. Lux eadem. On the day of the Matralia, the festival of Fortuna Virilis was also held; whose temple was dedicated in the Forum Boarium, by Servius Tullius, and which contained a wooden statue of that monarch, whose head was covered with a toga; the probable reasons for which are described in the text.

527. Dea. Fortuna.

528. Cælestemque homini, &c. Compare Fast. iv. 175.

529. Arsit enim magno, &c. Fortune, who from her apparent want of discrimination in the selection of her favorites, was believed to be blind, did not, according to the poet, in the case of Servius, give evidence of her defect, which in this case only, in hoc uno viro, appeared to have been removed; Servius having merited the patronage which he received from the enamoured deity.

531. Nocte domum parva. The poet assigns the first of the three probable causes for the head of the statue having been covered. Parva fenestra. Fortune having been in the habit of obtaining admission by night into the house of Servius through the window, one of the gates of the city, or according to others, of the Palatium, was called in commemoration, Porta Fenestella; whence

Nunc pudet, et vultus velamine celat amatos :
 Oraque sunt multa regia tecta toga.
 An magis est verum, post Tulli funera plebem 535
 Confusam placidi morte fuisse ducis ?
 Nec modus ullus erat : crescebat imagine luctus ;
 Donec eam positis occuluere togis.
 Tertia causa mihi spatio majore canenda est ;

 Tullia, conjugio, sceleris mercede, peracto,
 His solita est dictis exstimulare virum :
 Quid juvat esse pares, te nostræ cæde sororis,
 Meque tui fratris, si pia vita placet ?
 Vivere debuerant et vir meus, et tua conjux, 545
 Si nullum ausuri majus eramus opus.
 Et caput et regnum facio dotale parentis.
 Si vir es, i, dictas exige dotis opes.
 Regia res scelus est. Socero cape regna necato :

Plutarch;—ὁ νῦν Φινιστέλλαν πούλην καλοῦσι.

533. Vultus amatos. Of Servius.

535. An magis est verum. The poet assigns a second reason ; the intense grief of the people upon the death of Tullius, increased at the sight of his statue, crescebat imagine, &c. and they were obliged in consequence to conceal it from sight with their robes.

539. Tertia causa, &c. The third reason is discussed, as its nature requires, at greater length. Compare Liv. i. 46, 47.

540. Intus, &c. So Horace, Sat. ii. 6, 26, 'Interiore diem gyro trahit;' and Ovid, Amor. iii. 2, 12, 'Nunc stringam metas interiore rota;' Art. Amat. ii. 426, 'Interior curru meta terenda meo est.' This metaphor, taken from the turning of the chariot round the goal, to which the nearer it approached, the smaller the circle it described, is frequently used by the poets when they profess to confine their subjects within a narrow compass.

541. Sceleris mercede. Tullia having poisoned her husband, and Tarquinius Superbus his wife.

543. Quid juvat esse pares, &c. Macbeth. Act i. sc. 7.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk, Wherein you dressed yourself? hath it slept since?

And wakes it now to look so green and pale

At what it did so freely? From this time,

Such I account thy love. Art thou afraid
 To be the same in thine own act and valour,

As thou art in desire? Wouldst thou have that

Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life?

And live a coward in thine own esteem?

——— Hie thee hither,
 That I may pour my spirit in thine ear ;
 And chastise with the valour of my tongue

All that impedes thee from the golden round,

Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem

To have thee crowned withal.

549. Regiares scelus est. 'Crime is an action worthy of a king ;'
 a strange inducement to aim at royalty!

550. Et nostras patrio, &c.—
 Macbeth. Act i. sc. 5.

Lady M. Come, come you spirits
 That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here;
 And fill me, from the crown to the toe,
 top-full
 Of direst cruelty! make thick my blood,
 Stop up the access and passage to remorse;
 That no compunctious visitings of nature
 Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
 The effect, and it! Come to my woman's breasts,
 And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers,
 Wherever in your sightless substances
 You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick night,
 And pall thee in the damned smoke of hell!
 That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
 Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark
 To cry Hold, Hold.

553. Hinc cruor, hinc cædes.
 According to the poet, the insurrection of Tarquinius excited a fray between his partisans and those who remained faithful to the king; in which Servius, while flying homeward, was slain
 at the foot of the Esquiline:
 hence the bloody corpse was lying before the carriage, when Tullia drove to take possession of the palace. The mules shrank back, and her servant pulled in the reins, but she ordered him to drive on, and the blood from the dead body was sprinkled over the wheels and her dress. The street in which this occurred ever after bore the name Sceleratus, the Wicked.

557. Carpento. Putat Ovid. dictum carpentum, quasi carmen- tum quod eo Carmenta Evandri
mater usa sit. Forcel.

567. Sub imagine Tullî. Bearing the resemblance of Tullius.

573. Ore revelato, &c. The goddess declares that the removal of the robe from the face of the statue should inevitably attach to the Roman matrons the stigma of having abandoned the sense of shame and horror which they entertained of Tullia's impiety, and which they could not but feel while they gazed upon the sad memorial of the daughter's guilt, the muffled countenance of her father's image.

576. Movere preces. To pray.

578. Rex septimus. Including Tatius ; the following is the order of the Roman kings ; Romulus and Tatius, Numa, Tullus, Ancus, Servius, Tarquinius Superbus.

579. Te quoque magnifica. On the III. Id. Jun. a temple was dedicated by Livia to Concord, near the Liviæ Porticus, in sign of the harmony in which she lived with her husband Augustus.

581. Veniens ætas. sc. Posteri. Ubi Livia nunc est, &c. The site of the Livia Porticus had formerly been occupied by the noble mansion of Vedius Pollio, which must have been laid out, according to the poet, with great magnificence ; Urbis opus domus una fuit, &c. He bequeathed it to Augustus, by whom it was taken down, its splendour furnishing a bad precedent, and the portico, as above, erected in its place.

585. Nullo sub crimine regni. It was customary when any one had been convicted of aiming at sovereign power, to level the house of the offender to the ground, as in the case of Manlius and others. No charge of this kind, however, was to be implied against Vedius Pollio in the pulling down of his palace ; the objection against it was of another character, quia luxuria visa est, &c.

587. Sustinuit. This word implies a degree of moral courage in Augustus, who did not hesitate to sacrifice his own aggrandisement in consideration of the advantages and convenience of the public. See Sueton. Aug. c. 56.

589. Sic agitur censura. i. e. hoc est vere esse censorem. Augustus, it is well known, declined both the censorship and dictatorship ; and yet Macrobius, Saturn. ii. 4, addresses him by the title, as the poet does in the text. He exercised the office, however, though without the name, for he was invested by the senate with the same censorian power, which Julius Cæsar enjoyed as Præfectus morum, or moribus, for five successive years ; whence Horace, Epist. ii. 1, ‘Cum tot sustineas, ac tanta negotia solus, Res Italas armis tuteris, moribus ornes, Legibus emendes.’ &c. and Suetonius ; Aug. 27, ‘Recepit et morum legumque regimen perpetuum.’

590. Vindex. sc. Censor. Some copies read Judex.

591. Nulla nota est. The day following, Prid. Id. Jun. was not distinguished in the calendar by any festival.

592. Invicto Jovi. On the ides of June, a temple was dedicated to Jupiter, and the minor festival of Minerva was celebrated. It is not known whether the poet intended Invicto as an epithet or a surname ; the former is most probable, and that the temple alluded to was that of Jupiter Sponsor, or Latialis. For the Quinquatria Majora, see Fast. iii. n. 789. The Quinquatrus minores was the festival of flute-players, the origin and mode of which is detailed in the text.

598. Pace. With leave.

603. Mercede. The privilege of feasting at the banquets in the temple of Jupiter. Tempusque secutum. The period to which the poet alludes was during the cen-

Quod subito Graiæ frangeret artis opus.

sorship of Appius Claudius, Horat. Sat. ii. 6, 20, and C. Plautius, A.U. 443, by the former of whom the flute-players were prohibited from banquetting in Jupiter's temple. Previously to this, however, their privileges had been infringed by Appius, who, by virtue of his authority as Ædile, restricted the number which should accompany funerals, to ten.

604. Graiæ artis. The flute, according to the poet, having been invented by Minerva ; 697, infr. Some copies read Gratæ.

607. Exilio. See Fast. iv. N. 763. According to Cicero, exilium was not banishment, but merely the act by which a man renounced the freedom of his own city, by taking up his municipal franchise ; and the liberty which a person, bound by sureties to stand his trial before the people, had, of withdrawing from the consequences of their verdict by exiling himself, was only an application of the general principle ; De Orat. i. 39, 877, ' Qui Romam in exilium venisset, cui Romæ exulare jus esset.' If the accused staid till sentence was passed, he was condemned as a Roman, and it would be executed upon him wherever he was taken ; but if he availed himself of his municipal franchise in time, he had become a citizen of a foreign state, and the sentence was null and void. The ground of this exemption was not his emigrating, but his attaching himself to a city which had a sworn treaty of isopolity with Rome : they who had settled in an unprivileged place needed a decree of the people, declaring that their settlement should operate as a legal exilium. Niebuhr. vol. ii. 62, 63. The able and ingenious author of 'English Synonymes,' draws the following distinction between banishment and exile ; the former follows from a decree of justice, the latter either from the necessity of circumstances, or an order of authority ; the former is a disgraceful punishment, inflicted by a tribunal on delinquents, the latter is a disgrace incurred without dishonour ; the latter removes one from his country, the former drives him from it ignominiously ; it is the custom in Russia to banish offenders to Siberia, Ovid was exiled by the order of Augustus. Banishment is a certain compulsory exercise of power over another which must be submitted to ;

'O banishment ! eternal banishment !

Ne'er to return ! must we ne'er meet again ?

My heart will break. OTWAY.

Exile is a state into which one may go voluntarily, in which sense it is justly applied as in the text. Cf. Byron.

Childe Harold basked him in the noon-tide sun,

Disporting there like any other fly ;
 Nor deemed before his little day was done
 One blast might chill him into misery.
 But long ere scarce a third of his passed by,

Worse than adversity the Childe befel ;
 He felt the fulness of satiety :

Then loathed he in his native land to dwell,

Which seemed to him more lone than Eremité's sad cell.

- Exilium quodam tempore Tibur erat.
 Quæritur in scena cava tibia ; quæritur aris :
 Ducit supremos nœnia nulla toros. 610
 Servierat quidam, quantolibet ordine dignus,
 Tibure ; sed longo tempore liber erat.
 Rure dapes parat ille suo ; turbamque canoram
 Convocat. Ad festas convenit illa dapes.
 Nox erat, et vinis oculique animique natabant ; 615
 Cum præcomposito nuntius ore venit.
 Atque ita, Quid cessas convivium solvere ? dixit ;
 Auctor vindictæ jam venit ecce tuæ.
 Nec mora ; convivæ valido titubantia vino
 Membra movent : dubii stantque labantque pedes. 620
 At dominus, Discedite, ait : plaustroque morantes
 Sustulit. In plaustro sirpea lata fuit.
 Alliciunt somnos tempus, motusque, merumque ;
 Potaque se Tibur turba redire putat.
 Jamque per Esquilias Romanam intraverat urbem ; 625
 Et mane in medio plaustra fuere foro.

And [now] Childe Harold was sore sick at heart,
 And from his fellow-bacchanals would flee ;
 'Tis said at times the sullen tear would start
 But pride congealed the drop within his e'e ;
 Apart he stalked in joyless reverie,
 And from his native land resolved to go,
 And visit scorching climes beyond the sea.
Canto i. 4, 6.

608. Exilium quodam tempore, &c. The poet seldom loses an opportunity of alluding to his own unhappy position ; he touchingly contrasts in the above line his remoteness from a country to which he appears to have been bound by the most tender feelings of regard, with the vicinity of Tibur, which once was considered a sufficient exile, to Rome.

609. Quæritur in scena, &c. The want of the flutes was deeply felt at all celebrations in which the players had formerly taken such a distinguished part. The poet proceeds to explain how they were restored.

616. Præcomposito ore. With feigned intelligence.

618. Vindictæ. Properly the rod with which the slave was struck in sign of his manumission ; so called, as some suppose from Vindicus, or Vindex, a slave of the Vitellii, who gave information to the senate of the conspiracy undertaken by the sons of Brutus and others to restore the Tarquins, and who is said to have been first freed by the Prætor having placed the rod upon his head, and gone through the rest of the ceremony which afterwards obtained in Rome. It is used in the text to signify liberty.

622. Sirpea. A mat, or other covering made of twigs, Forcel. which was thrown over the waggon that contained the musicians ; Plutarch calls those vehicles, ἀμάξας δέρεσι κύκλω περικαλυπτομένας. Some copies read scirpea, from scirpus.

626. Et mane in medio, &c. 'Nec prius sensere, quam plaustis in foro relictis, plenos crapulæ eos lux oppressit.' Liv.

627. Plautius. Claudius, Calidus, and Cautius are proposed instead of the reading in the text, to which there is no ostensible objection. It is most likely that Plautius was anxious to make the tibicines some atonement for the indignities they had received from Appius, and by the artifices described in the text shewed them to be a body of such importance as to secure their remaining at Rome.

629. Tibicina. A band of female minstrels.

631. Ne forte notentur, &c. Plautius wished it to be supposed that the musicians had returned by the consent of his colleague as well as his own. This consent was not always required among the Censors, one of whom might reject, and another retain an individual in the senate or his tribe, &c. Liv. xl. sub. fin.

Minerva claims the credit of having invented the pipe, with which she was put out of conceit, having seen, by the reflection of her face in the water, that it disfigured her by swelling her cheeks. She threw it away, and it was found by Marsyas, the Satyr, who after some effort, succeeded in performing so well that he became the admiration of the nymphs, and even challenged Apollo to a contest of music. Apollo was finally successful, upon which he tied Marsyas to a tree and flayed him alive ; the tears which were shed by the rural deities for their favourite's misfortune, formed, it is said, the beautiful river in Phrygia, ever after known by his name. Terebrato buxo. The perforated box, of which wood the pipe was formed.

653. Tertia lux veniat. Including the ides, xvii. Kal. Jul. the Hyades rise ; Thyene was one of them, and is here put for the whole constellation ; for Dodoni see Fast. v. n. 167.

654. Agenorei bovis. See Fast. 165 and 551.

658. Cras. xvi. Kal. Jul.

659. Heliadum. The daughters of the sun, and sisters of Phaëton. Radios ubi tinxerit undis. On the night of the xvi. Kal. Jul. Orion, the son of Hyreus, whence proles Hyriea, rises acronycally.

660. Stella serena. Stella is here used for Stellæ, as Fast. iv. 364 ; but the poet applies Geminos incorrectly as an epithet of polos, which is used to express the firmament indifferently in the singular or plural.

662. Continua nocte. On the night of the xv. Kal. Jul. the Dolphin rises. This day was remarkable for the triumphant victory obtained by the dictator A. Posthumius Tubertus over the Æqui and Volsci ; see Livy, iv. 26 ; who had pitched their camp in Algidus, a town of Latium.

666. In niveis equis. See Adam's Rom. Antiq. Boyd's edition, pp. 325, 326.

667. Jam sex, et totidem, &c. By this and the following line it is to be understood that thirteen days before the end of the month, sc. xiv. Kal. Jul. the sun leaves Gemini and enters Cancer ; upon which day a temple was dedicated to Minerva on Mount Aventine.

671. Jam. XIII. Kal. Jul. Nurus. Aurora.

673. Summano. On this day a temple was dedicated to Summanus, a deity with whom the poet professes to be unacquainted. It is probable that Pluto was worshipped under this title, qu. Summus Manium. Mart. Capell. ii. p. 40 ;

the temple was situated near that of Juventus, Plin. xxix. c. 52, This deity is mentioned by Cicero De Divin. i c. 10, and Plautus, Bacch. 4, 8, 54, where he is called Submanus.

674. Tum cum Romanis. See x. 187 supr. According to Varro, the worship of this deity was instituted by Tatius.

675. Hanc. sc. Auroram. Galatea. A sea nymph, daughter of Nereus and Doris. On the night of the XIII. Kal. Jul. the constellation Ophiuchus rises ; Æsculapius, who was raised to the stars, having been so called, from Gr. ὄφις, anguis, and ἔχων, infr. 679. By some this constellation is supposed to have represented Hercules, to whom its name is applicable, as alluding to his having strangled the serpents which Juno had placed

681. Non impune, &c. This and the verse following are rejected by Heinsius. Træzena. A city of Peloponnesus.

682. Dividit obstantes pectore, &c. See Eurip. Hippol. where the catastrophe alluded to is described in full.

687. Multum indignante Diana. Eurip. Hippol. 1420.

688. Coronides. Æsculapius, son of the nymph Coronis.

692. Glauci. Son of Minos, restored to life by Æsculapius.

693. Tunc, cum observatas, &c. This distich is also rejected by Heinsius.

694. Usus et auxilio. It is said that while Æsculapius was considering how he might recover Glaucus, he killed with his staff a serpent which came in his way, whereupon another serpent approached with an herb in its mouth, with which having touched the head of the dead one, it came to life again, and they both withdrew. With this herb he subsequently performed his extraordinary cures.

704. Propter te, &c. In consequence of the complaint of Apollo, Jupiter restored Æsculapius to life, and raised him to the skies.

705. Non ego te, &c. On the ix. Kal. Jul. Flaminius was defeated at the lake Trasimene, having engaged in the battle contrary to the auspices ; whence tempora temeraria, infr. 709.

708. Per volucres. See Fast. i. n. 180.

711. Postera lux melior. On the viii. Kal. Jul. Syphax, king of Numidia, was defeated by C. Lælius, and Masinissa, king of the Massyli ; his capital, Cyrta, was taken, and his wife Sophonisba and family made prisoners ; A.U. 550. Liv. xxx. 3—13.

712. Hasdrubal. The brother of Hannibal ; he was defeated by the Roman consuls M. Livius Salinator and C. Claudius Nero, in a battle on the banks of the Metaurus. Claudius caused his head to be cut off and thrown before the advanced guard of Hannibal. By suis telis the poet means, ‘his own stratagems ;’ the counterplots of Claudius Nero having succeeded against the wiles of Hasdrubal.

715. Quam cito venerunt, &c. On the viii. Kal. Jul. the festival of Fors Fortuua, or Fortuna Virilis, whose temple was dedicated by Servius Tullius, was celebrated. Supr. 523.

717. Deam Fortem. The goddess Fors.

718. In Tiberis ripa. This temple was situated at the far side of the Tiber, which was crossed either by bridges or boats, infr. 719. Pars, pede, pars etiam, &c. To this it is objected, that decurrite cannot be made to signify crossing the river, but running down or along with it, and that consequently the temple was at the side of the river next the city. It appears, however, that decurro may be taken in the sense of percurro, to run across or traverse hastily ; Forcel. ; whence Ovid, Metam. xiv. 50, ‘decurrit pedibus super æquora sicci,’ and, ix. 590, ‘decurrere mari.’ Lucret. vi. 668. ‘Perque mare et terras rapidus percurre turbo ;’ this is sufficient to meet the objection, as supr. advanced by two late commentators upon the Fasti, in a tone which seems to savour rather of presumption than truth.

721. Coronatæ lintres. In allusion to the custom of suspending garlands from the prows.

723. Qui posuit, de plebe fuisse. In allusion to the birth of Servius Tullius, who was the son of Ocrisia, a handmaid of queen

Tanaquil, and one of the captives taken at Corniculum. While she was offering some cakes to the household genius, she saw an apparition of the god in the fire on the hearth ; she was directed by Tanaquil to array herself as a bride and shut herself up in the chapel. She became pregnant by a god ; by many of the Romans the household genius was believed to be the father of Servius ; by others, Vulcan. The former supported their opinion by the festival instituted by Servius in honour of the Lares ; the latter by the god of fire having saved the statue of Servius on the occasion of the temple having been burned in which it was placed. Niebuhr. ii. 358. Dionys. iv. 2.

726. Templa propinqua. There were two temples of Fortune, in the same place, but the poet is incorrect in attributing the dedication of both to Servius. Liv. x. 46. ‘Carvilius consul (v. c. 459.) de reliquo ære ædem Fortis Fortunæ de manubiis faciendam locavit prope ædem ejus deæ ab rege Servio Tullio dedicatam.’

727. Suburbana æde. Of Fors Fortuna.

731. Eadem die. sc. vi. Kal. Jul. According to Columella, viii. Kal. Jul. is the summer solstice.

733. Lucifero subeunte. On the v. Kal. Jul. a temple was dedicated to the Lares in the Forum, and also that to Jupiter Stator, which had been vowed by Romulus in the Sabine war ; see Liv. i. 12.

737. Tot restant de mense, &c. Three days from the end of this month, iv. Kal. Jul. a temple was dedicated to Romulus, Fast. ii. n. 393.

738. Trabææ Quirine tuæ. For Tibi, Quirine, trabæato ; see Fast. i. n. 37. ii. 385.

739. Iuleis Kalendis. Julius Cæsar was born on the fourth of the ides of July, whence the month received its name.

741. Adjunxerit isti, &c. A temple was built to Hercules, u. c. 575, by M. Fulvius Nobilior in the Circus Flaminius, wherein were placed the statues of the Muses. This temple was subsequently restored from decay, u. c. 767, by Marcius Philippus, the step-father, 751 infr. of Augustus.

744. Marcia. The daughter of M. Philippus, whom Cato of Utica married, after he had divorced Attilia.

745. Sacrificio ab Anco. ‘Numæ Pompilii regis nepos, filia ortus, Aucus Marcius erat.’— ‘longe antiquissimum ratus, sacra publica, ut ab Numa instituta erant, facere ; omnia ea ex commentariis regis pontificem, in album relata, proponere in publico jubet.’ Liv. i. 32.

751. Nupta fuit quondam, &c. Philip’s first wife was sister to Cæsar’s mother ; his second, Accia, or Atia, the mother of Augustus.

754. Increpuitque lyram. And struck the lyre ; in token of assent.

ADDENDA.

BOOK I.

20. Missa. In the temple of Apollo, built by Augustus on the Palatine hill, there was a public library, where authors, particularly poets, used to recite their compositions, sitting, in full dress, sometimes before select judges, who passed sentence on their comparative merits. The poets were then said committi, to be contrasted or matched, as combatants; and the reciters, committere opera. Hence Caligula said of Seneca, that he only composed COMMISSIONES, showy declamations. Suet. Aug. 45. 89, ‘Committit vates, et comparat inde Maronem.’ Juvenal, 6, 435.

23. Impetus. Cf. Ov. pont. ‘Impetus ille sacer qui vatū pectora nutrit.’

25. Si licet et fas est. Cf. Liv. 1, 2. ‘Quemcunque eum dici jus fasque est.’—Speaking of Æneas.

47. Nefastus. Dr. Crombie's Gymnasium ii. 52, et seq. ‘Days among the Romans were distinguished into three general divisions, the Dies festi, Dies profesti, and Dies intercesi. The Dies festi, holy days, were consecrated to religious purposes; the Dies profesti were given to the common business of life; and the Dies intercesi were half-holydays divided between sacred and ordinary occupations. The

Dies festi were set apart for the celebration of these four solemnities, ‘Sacrificia,’ ‘Epulæ,’ ‘Ludi,’ and ‘Feriæ.’

‘The profesti were Fasti, Comitiales, Comperendini, (days for giving bail); Stati, for deciding causes between a Roman and a foreigner, and Præliares.’—p. 53.

64. Janus. For Zanus, (as Ζών, jugum) from Ζάν, Jupiter, (see Donnegan in Ζάν). Jamieson: ‘Janus is said to be the Jon of the Scandinavians, one of the names of Jupiter, which is given to the sun, as signifying that he is the father of the year, and of heaven and earth. The sun was worshipped by the Trojans under the name of Jona, as appears from one of Gruter’s inscriptions.’

Al. for Janus from Gr. ἵω, to go; from the procession or motion of the sun. Thus ἕτος, a year, is from ἵω, to go: Ovid: ‘EUNT ANNI more fluentis aquæ.’ January in Armorica is ‘mis jencer,’ i.e. the month of cold air; from jen, cold, and ær. W. Valpy's Etym. Dic.

64. Inque meo, &c. Cf. Claudian, xxviii. 640. ‘Novum fastis aperit felicibus annum Ore coronatus gemino.’

118. Omnia sunt nostra, &c. Hence janua, from Janus.

151. Omnia tunc florent, &c.

— At once arrayed
 In all the colours of the flushing year,
 By Nature's swift and secret working hand,
 The garden glows, and fills the liberal air
 With lavish fragrance; while the promised fruit,
 Lies yet a little embryo, unperceived
 Within its crimson folds.

Thomson's Spring.

164. Bruma. Though bruma and hyems are frequently identified, yet the ancient Roman authors used them to express two very different ideas. Hiems properly signified a whole season, or quarter of the year: and Bruma only one day, and that the shortest in the year; the winter solstice; whence Bruma novi prima est, &c.; and Varro, L.L. 5, 'Bruma dicta, quod brevissimus dies.' Hence the month of December is called the month of Bruma; whence Martial, viii. Ep. 41 (of December) 'Quæ medio brumæ mittere mense solent.' vii. 94, 'Bruma est; et riget horridus December.' v. 104. 'Post Novembres, imminente jam bruma.'

193. Saturno. Jamieson; 'The Saxons, a nation of Seythie origin, worshipped Saturn under the name of Seater. The same day of the week was consecrated to him that bore his name in the Roman calendar. Varro derives the name ab satu. Vossius refers Saturnus to the Hebrew STR, to hide oneself. whence the god Latius.

211. Creverunt et opes. Cf. Juvenal, xiv. 139. 'Crescit amor nummi, quantum ipsa pecunia crescit.' So Sallust speaks of this 'Opum furiosa cupido,' Catil. xi. 'Semper infinita insatiabilis, neque copia. neque inopia minuitur.'

313. Octipedis, &c. A star is said to rise cosmically, when it rises at the same time with the sun; or with that degree of the ecliptic in which the sun is then situated.

Cosmical setting is when a star sets and goes down in the west, at the same time that the sun rises in the east.

But, according to Kepler, to rise or set cosmically is only to ascend above or descend below the horizon.

The term Heliacal, applied to the rising of a star, planet, &c. denotes its issuing or emerging out of the rays and lustre of the sun, wherein it was hidden before; whether this be owing to the recess of the sun from the star; or that of the star from the sun. When applied to the setting of a star, it denotes entering or immersing into the sun's rays, and so becoming inconspicuous by the superior light of that luminary.

A star rises heliacally, when after it has been in conjunction with the sun, and on that account invisible, it gets at such a distance from him, as to be seen in the morning before the sun's rising.

The same is said to set heliacally, when it approaches so near the sun as to be hidden therein. So that in strictness the heliacal rising and setting are only an apparition and occultation.

The ancients computed that a star, between the tropics, would be forty days before it got clear of the sun's rays, and became conspicuous again. Hesiod first made this computation, and the rest followed him. The period comes very near to the computation of the moderns; for the sun advancing nearly a degree every day, it will be twenty days approaching to it, from the heliacal setting of the star, and thirty days more withdrawing, till the heliacal rising.

Among the ancients, a star was properly said to be acronycal, or to rise acronycally, which rose in the evening when the sun was set. Greek writers, it is true, use the term ἄκρονυχίας, indifferently, in speaking either of the evening or morning, because both are considered as ἄκρα της νυκτός, the extremities of the night, and hence they applied acronychal to the rising and setting of the stars, either in the morning or evening. But the ancients were more distinct, and by ἄκρονύκτιος, understood rather the beginning or approach of night than the end of it; accordingly, with them, those stars which rose in the evening, not those in the morning, were said to rise acronychally.

339. Lachrymatas cort. myrr. The Editor is indebted to the kindness of an ardent admirer of Shakspeare, for directing his attention to the passage quoted in the note, as it stands in the folio of 1623. The much agitated question, whether the proper reading is 'their medicinal gum,' or 'their gum medicinal,' is here set most satisfactorily at rest—

— "Of one, whose subdued eyes
Albeit, vn-vsed to the melting moode,
Drops teares as fast as the Arabia trees
Their medicinable gumme."
Shaks. Fol. Ed. 1623. Isaac Jaggard, &c.

342. Fila croci. Hence the Greeks called it ξανθότριχα κρόκον.

353. Exemplo. Punishment. Phaedr. iii. fab. vi. 20. 'Justoque vindicavit exemplo impetum.' So the Greeks used παράδειγμα. Cf. New Test. Matt. i. 19, καὶ μὴ θέλων αὐτὴν παραδειγματίσαι, &c. and Blomfield in loc.

385. Hyperiona. The sun, the Mithres of the Persians. Strab. xv. p. 732. Τιμῶσι δὲ καὶ "Ἡλίον, ὃν καλοῦσι Μίθραν.

389. Extā canum vidi. Hence Diana was called Κυνοφαγῆς ἑσά.

443. Omne solum forti patria. This sentiment is borrowed from Euripid. Frag. No. 27, "Ἀπας μὲν ἄλλο αἰετῶ πιεράσιμος, Ἀπασα δὲ χθών ἀνδρὶ γενναίῳ πατρὶς.

607. Ceres. Jamieson; 'Could we view it as of Scythian origin, it might be traced to Suio-Goth. kaïra, which is exactly synonymous with the Latin queror; because she went from place to place bewailing the loss of her daughter.' Or for queres, from queror.

Al. for geres from γῆρες, which is stated by Hesychius to be one of her names.

Al. from cereo which is said to be an obsolete word for creo, to create; as producing the fruits of the earth. Valp. Etym. Dic.

BOOK II.

35. Omne nefas, &c. The ἱλασμός, αγιασμός, καταρτισμός of the Greeks; lustratio of the Latins.

87. Sæpe canes leporisque, &c. Compare Isaiah xi. 6. "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them."

110. Trajectus penna. Burmann understands this of an arrow with which the swan had been pierced.

195. Hæc fuit illa dies. Ovid must have mistaken the day of their departure for that of their destruction; since the latter is universally and most positively said by other writers to have been the same which afterwards acquired a still more disastrous celebrity from the taking of Rome, and which is likewise held to have been that of the battle on the Allia. The day on which the race of heroes left Rome was also not to be forgotten. Niebuhr. ii. x. 194, where see the history of this family.

198. Arma professa. One of the senses attached to the participle professus by Stephens in the Thesaurus Ling. Lat. is explained by the Greek παγγειλάμενος, in which signification it is to be taken in the text, which he also quotes, as supr. This interpretation, and its peculiar applicability to the text, is at once borne out by the following extract from H. Stephens' Thesaurus Græc. Ling. 'Επαγγεῖλία, interea I. de eo dicitur, qui aliquid in se præstandum suscepit, qui sponte agit, non coactus, aut invitus. Ita de Corona. p. 271. 7.—'Αντιφώντα, ὅς ἐπαγγεῖλάμενος Φιλίππῳ τὰ νεώρια ἐμπρόσιν. Sic adv. Leptin. p. 460, 27. 'Ορῶν—σπανίζοντα τὸν δῆμον χρημάτων, τάλαντον ἔδωκεν αὐτὸς ἐπαγγεῖλάμενος. i. e. Ultro, Sponte sua. Similiter fere de Coron. 263. pen. Ὡν μέντοι γε ἐκ τῆς ἰδίας οὐσίας ἐπαγγεῖλάμενος δίδωκα. Inde aliquoties, cum quadam plenitudine dicitur, αὐτεπαγγέλλοντας ἐδελοντάς: de Coron. 247, 24. 2. Deinde significat Polliceri, Fidem dare, et se obstringere ad aliquid præstandum; of which many examples are given. From the foregoing, the phrase arma professa may be interpreted of a war, voluntarily undertaken by a family, who bound themselves of their own accord to bring it to a close.

201. Carmentis portæ. Without doubt they had previously assembled and sacrificed on the Quirinal, where their gens was wont to celebrate its religious worship, and where, perhaps, they all still dwelt; as may be inferred with regard to the Corneliî from the Vicus Cornelius, which retained its name even down to the sixteenth century; from thence they marched through the Carmental gate, which lay next to that hill and at its foot, along the road from which they were never to return. All the Roman gates had two arches, one for such as were going out of the city, the other for such as were coming in: each kept to his right hand: five hundred years passed away, and no Roman, whose mind was swayed by the faith of his ancestors, went out of the city by this gate.

Its site was on the line drawn from the corner below Ara Celi to the foot of the Quirinal, not far from Marcel de' Corvi, and is now covered by rubbish to a great height. At the laying out of Trajan's forum, the walls between this gate and the Quirinal, if not the gate itself, must have been thrown down, and so a way was opened which no superstition forbade. As the Fabii marched out at this gate on their way to Etruria, it is clear that there were no protecting walls then going down to the Tiber; else they would have had to enter through another to get at the bridge. However near any might have lived to it, they still went round to another gate; whence Ire per hanc noli, &c. Into the town, through the other arch, every one came without scruple; as appears by the procession in the second Punic war. Livy, xxvii. 37.

421. Projectis coronis. It was usual for the guests, on their departure, to throw away the garlands they had worn at the feast; so Ovid, Ep. xxi. 165.

Project ipsa suas deducta fronte coronas, Spissaque de nitidis tergit amoma suis.

to which Moore alludes also in the well known and exquisite lines;

I feel like one,
Who treads alone,
Some banquet-hall deserted;
Whose lights are fled,
Whose garlands dead,
And all but he departed, &c.

615. Et libate. Libare is used of liquids, as the σπένδειν and λείβειν of the Greeks.

657. Ut solet a magno, &c. Cf. Byron:

"The wind was down, but yet the sea ran high."

This simile is illustrated by Aulus Gellius, Noct. Att. ii. 30, speaking of the south or south-west wind: "Quibus jam nihil spirantibus undæ tamen factæ diutius tument, et cùm vento quidam jamdudum tranquillæ sunt, sed mare est etiam atque etiam undabundum."

669. Hostis ut hospes. Livy employs a similar lusus verborum, in loc. "hostis pro hospite mihi sibi que," &c.

BOOK III.

116. Quantam nunc aquilas. "The eagle," says Johnston, "chal- lengeth the first place, not that it is the best dish at table, for none will eat it, but because it is the king of the birds." Pindar speaks of "the great eagle, the chief in- agistrate of the birds." Josephus says that the eagle was selected for the Roman legionary standards, because he is "the king of all the birds, and the most powerful of them all, whence he has become the emblem of the empire and the omen of victory." The golden eagle with extended wings was borne by the Persian monarch, Xen. Cyrop. vii. from whom it is probable the Romans adopted it, as it was subsequently adopted from them by Napoleon, and the United States: while the Persians themselves may have borrowed the symbol from the ancient Assyrians, in whose banners it waved till Babylon was conquered by Cyrus. This may serve to explain why the expanded eagle is so frequently alluded to in the prophetic works of Scripture. Hosea viii. 1, Ezek. xvii. 3-7. (Cf. also Psalm 103. 5.) It was, no doubt, on the same account that the eagle was assigned in the ancient mytholo- gies as the bird of Jove. Lib. of Entert. Knowl. Hab. of Birds.

260. Salii. Were twelve in number; their dress consisted of an embroidered tunic, bound with a brazen belt, and a toga prætexta or trabea; on their head they wore a high cap, shaped like a cone; a sword hung from their side; in their right hand they carried a spear or rod, in the left one of the Ancilia; which however, accord- ing to Lucan. i. 603, hung from their neck; 'Et Salius læto por- tans ancilia collo;' 'The Sali blithe, with bucklers on the neck.' Rowe. They used to go to the Capitol through the forum and other parts of the city, singing the verses called by Festus axamenta or assamenta, because they were written on tablets. See Horace Epist. ii. 1, 86, Tacitus, Annal. ii. 83.

No one could be admitted into the order of the Salii, unless a native and freeborn, whose father and mother were alive. Lucan calls them lecta juvenus patricie, because chosen from the patrician order. Their chief was called Præsul; their principal musician. Vates; and he who admitted new members, Magister. According to Dionysius, Tullus Hostilius added twelve other Salii, who were called Agonales, Agonenses, or Collini, from their chapel having been on the Colline hill. Those instituted by Numa had their chapel on the Palatine hill; whence, for the sake of distinction, they were called Palatini.

BOOK IV.

1. Geminorum Amorum. According to Hesiod, Theog. 201. Cupido, "Ἔρως, and Jocus "Ιαίγος. Cf. Horat. Od. I. ii. 33, "Quam Jocus circumvolat et Cupido."

4. Molli pectore. 'Molle mecum levibus cor est violabile telis; et semper causa est cur ego semper anem.'

9. Primis sine crimine, &c. Cf. Amor. II. xv. 4. 'Nec me delicæ dedecuerunt meæ.' Horat. Ep. I. xiv. 36. 'Nec luisse pudet, sed non incidere lusum.'

157. Lapsa est. Degenerated. Cf. Cic. Leg. ii. 15, 'Mores lapsi ad molliorem;' and Liv. præfat, 'labente paulatim disciplinâ,' and a little after 'ut mores magis magisque lapsi sint.'

165. Nox ubi transierit. Cf. Hygin. Post. Astron. ii. 21, 'Nec unquam ullius oculis certum est, sex an septem existimentur.' Schol. Pind. ad Nem. 13. κατὰ τὴν ἑπτάτην, esse Septem, sed κατὰ τὴν ὀκτώτην, sex. Hence the constellation was called ἑξήστειον.

169. Pleiades. Vergiliæ quoque diætæ, quia earum ortu ver finitur, et æstas incipit; Festus; and Ildorus. Orig. iii. c. 70. Has Latini Vergiliæ dicunt a temporis significatione, quod vere oriuntur. Al. scrib. Virgiliæ quod virgulæ modo porrigantur, ut est apud Voss. in Etymol. Forcel.

219. At cur turrita. Cf. Æneid, vi. 786. x. 253. Lucret. ii. 640.

Sqq. 'Muralique caput summum cinxere corona, Eximiiis munita locis quod sustinet urbis.' And on 'cur hinc genus acre,' supr. 'Adjunxere feras, quia quamvis effera proles Officiis debet molliori victa parentum.'

225. Cum Trojam, &c. Cf. Æneid, i. 68, 'Ilium in Italiam portans, victosque Penates.' Sacrificeras; because they bore the Penates and Vesta.

249. Picta coloribus ustis. Cf., Plin. xxxv. 41, 'Tertium accessit, resolutis igni ceris penicillo utendi, quæ pictum in navibus nec sole nec sale, ventisque corrumpitur.' Arnobius describes thus what Atalus sent to the Romans;—'Ex Phrygia nihil quidem aliud dicitur missum rege ab Attalo, nisi lapis quidem non magnus, ferri manu hominis sine ulla impressione qui posset, coloris furvi, atque atrî, angelis prominentibus inæqualis.'

288. Puram. Which has a purifying efficacy. The water with which they usually sprinkled themselves on coming into the presence of the Gods, was called ros. Hence Metam. i. 371,—'ubi libatos irrorare liquores vestibibus et capiti.'

304. Sinister abit. 'Nempe Tiberis per duos alveos in mare effluit, dextrum et sinistrum.' Burm.

319. Ipsa sedens plastro. Hence Orpheus, Hymn. xiii. 2. calls her chariot καρὸς ἵππον ἄμμα.

320. Sparguntur flore. Lucret. ii. 627. 'Ningunt rosarum floribus, umbrantes Matrem comitumque catervas.'

363. Insperxit. i.e. Ex alto despexerit. So Virgil, speaking of the wooden horse. Æneid, ii. 47. Machina inspectura domos. Cf. Nov. Test. 1 Pet. i. 12,—εἰς ᾧ ἐπιθυμοῦσιν ἄγγελοι παρακύψαι. 'This earnest desire of the angels to contemplate the sufferings of the Christ, was emblematically signified by the cherubim placed in the inward tabernacle with their faces turned down towards the mercy-seat. Exod. xxv. 20. To that emblem there is a plain allusion in the word παρακύψαι, to stoop.' Macknight in loc. cit.

384. Veteres focos. Cf. Horat. Epod. ii. 43, "Sacrum vetustis exstruat lignis forum."

396. Hennum, or Enna, was called from its situation as mentioned in the note. umbilicus Siciliae, Gr. ὀμφαλὸς Σικελίας.

398. Dea flava. Ceres, so called from the colour of ripe corn.

399. Consuetis puellis. The daughters of Oceanus and Minerva and Diana. Hom. Hymn. in Cerer, παιζουσταν κοῦρησι συν ὠκεανὸς βαθυκόλπιδι.

411. Violaria. Properly, beds of violets; here, violets themselves.

431. Mentis inops rapitur. Hom. in Cerer. 43. ὥστ' αἰῶνες ἐπ' τροφῆσιν τε καὶ υἱὸν μαριμένην.

491. Simulârat anum. Hom. Hymn. γοηὶ ταλαιγενεῖ ἐναλίγκιος.

493. Semperque parens. Never suffering the loss of a child.

531. Dum non es scelerata, &c. See for a similar oxymoron. Métem. iii. 5. ix. 408. 'facto pius et sceleratus eodem.'

537. Sumion expositum. 'Sumium's marbled steep.' Byron.

556. Qui latet, &c. Gr. παρόκεικται. Ceres thus addresses these men in Homer, Hymn. 69. σο γὰρ δὲ τᾶσαν ἐπὶ χθόνα καὶ κατὰ πόντον Αἰεῖρες ἐκ ὕλης κατὰδύσκεται ἀπτήισσι.

625. Animo quieto. The dative case; the answer was given while the mind was at rest in sleep.

BOOK V

57. Magna fuit quondam, &c. Among the many and equitable reasons for rendering to old age that deference and respect which it deserves, not the least is its possession of that superior degree of knowledge, which is only to be acquired by long experience. Cf. Euripid. Belleroph. Fragm. 22, εἰ γὰρ χρόνος διδάγμα ποικιλότατον. Aristot. Polit. vii. 9. 'Ἡ μὲν δύναμις ἐν νεωτέροις, ἡ δὲ φρόνησις ἐν πρεσβυτέροις ἐστίν. Eurip. Melan. Fragm. 17. Παλαιὸς αἶνος. "Ἐργα μὲν νεωτέρων, βουλὰὶ δ' ἔχρουσι πάν γεραιτίων κράτος. Cicer. Senect. 6. Consilio, auctoritate, sententiâ res magnæ geruntur, quibus non modo non orbari, sed etiam augeri senectus solet.

198. Rem fortunatis, &c. 'Your sires' islands of the blest.' Byron. The νήσοι μακάρων are supposed by some to have been what are now called the Canary Islands. See Mitsch. in Horat. Ep. xvi. 41. Homer, Od. Δ. 563.

283. Venerat in morem. The student shall find some most important information on this subject by referring to Adams' Roman Antiquities, Appendix pp. 505-6. Boyd's edition, 1834.

551. Illa jubam dextra. Lucian, Dial. Zephyr. et Not. ἡ δὲ τῇ λαϊᾷ μὲν ἔίχετο τῷ κέρατος, ὡς μὴ ἀπολισθάνοι, τῇ ἑτέρᾳ δὲ ἡνιμωμένον τὸν πῆπλον ζυνεῖχε.

577. Pars putat, &c. Nonius. 'Quum in quintum gradum pervenerant, atque habebant sexaginta annos, tum denique erant a publicis negotiis liberi atque expediti et otiosi: ideo in proverbium quidam putant venisse sexagenanos de ponte dejici oportere, id est, quod suffragium non ferant, quod per pontum ferebant.'

600. Pulvis inanis. Anacr. iv. 9. ὀλίγη κεισόμεθα κόνις. Horat. IV. Od. vii. 16. Pulvis et umbra sumus.

624. Solita fallere voce. Cf. Horat. I. Epist. xvi. 58, 'Quandocunque deos vel porco, vel bove placat; Jane pater clare, clare quum dixit Apollo; Labra movet metuens audiri; pulehra Laverna, Da mihi fallere, da justo sanctoque videri: Noctem peccatis, et fraudibus objice nubem.'

645. Hic eques, ille pugil Sehöl. Pind. 144. Κάστορά θ' ἱπποδάμον, καὶ ἀειθλόφρον Πόλυδιῦκα. Hom. Iliad. iii. 237.

BOOK VI.

10. Obstreperetur. Obstreperere is especially used to signify the murmuring of waters, or the whispering of the wind among the leaves of the trees.

133. Qui frondibus olim esse solet seris. Cf. Macbeth, Act v. Sc. ii.

"I have lived long enough; my way of life
Is fallen into the sear, the yellow leaf."

240. Mens. Gr. Μῆτις.

275. Nec tu aliud Vestam, &c. Lactant. Inst. I. xii. 5. 'Quia ignis inviolabile sit elementum, nihilque nasci possit ex eo, quippe qui omnia, quæ arripuerit, absumat.'

320. Putant aliquos scilicet esse deos. Compare Psalm xlii. 3. 'My tears have been my meat day and night, while they daily say unto me, Where is now thy God?'

657. Temporibus veterum. According to Perizonius, Animad. Histor. c. 6, it was customary among the ancient Romans for the praises of great men to be sung to the flute at their banquets; a fact which Cicero only learned from Cato, who seems to have spoken of it as a usage no longer subsisting; Tusc. Quæst. iv. 3. "Gravissimus auctor in Originibus dixit Cato, morem apud majores hunc epularum fuisse, ut deinceps, qui accubarent, canerent ad tibiam clarorum virorum laudes atque virtutes."

The Nænia, one of the various forms of Roman popular poetry, containing the praises of the dead, was also sung to the flute at the funeral processions. Cicero de Legib. ii. 24.

659. Cantabat fanis. The flute, Gr. αὐλός, was used in the sacrifices of the gods, at festivals, games, entertainments, and funerals. Minerva is said to have invented the straight, and Pan the oblique flute: Bion. Idyll. iii. 7;

Ὡς εἶρεν πλαγίανλον ὁ Πάν, ὡς ἀνλόν
'Αθανα.

In scripture Jubal is mentioned as the inventor of the flute; Gen. iv. 21. Among the Greeks the first inventor of this instrument is said to have been Hyagius, a Phrygian, who lived in the time of Joshua. Flutes were made of the bones of stags or fawns, and hence called εἰσθροισι ἀνλοι; the manufacturing them of such materials is ascribed to the Thebans. They were also made of the bones of asses, and of elephants; likewise of reed, box, and lorn; Fast. iv. n. 190.
